SOLON SAYS LIQUOR SOLD IN CAPITOL

BLEASE OFFERS TO BUY DRINK NEATH BIG DOME

Says If Question Ever Comes Up Again He Will Vote Dry Because the People of His State Want Him To Do So--Senator Willis Says Few Wet Committees Cannot Make National Issue of Prohibition.

Washington (UP)—Bootleggers sell their wares under the very dome of the Capitol, Senator Cole L. Blease, South Carolina Democrat, told at a policemen's meeting Thursday night.

"Every day they come to me and say 'how much do you need today, Senator?'" he said.

"If you think I don't mean that, come up to the Capitol some day and I'll buy you a drink," he told a newspaper man later.

James E. Jones, director of prohibition, replied to Blease that he did not believe that "the Capitol is a rendezvous for bootleggers."

If the prohibition question ever comes before the senate again, Senator Blease told the policemen's meeting, "I am going to vote dry because the people of my state want me to, but I am also going to tell the senate when I do it, it is their vote and not mine."

The senator declared that it was a shame for policemen to brag about how many arrests for drunkenness had been made, adding that when he was a mayor he had ordered his officers to escort drunken men to their homes. He remarked that he knew of one case where a judge sentenced a man for being drunk when the judge himself "had liquor on his breath."

But as far as actually dragging the issue into the fall campaign is concerned, wets and dries both admitted the time is not yet suitable.

"A few wet communities cannot make a national issue out of prohibition," said Senator Willis, Republican dry of Ohio.

On the other hand Senator Edge, Republican wet, of New Jersey, declared, "the dry law will be an issue in several states of the east and middle west in the congressional elections. More and more sentiment against the dry laws is being stirred up every day, he said.

In connection with the check of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Andrews on the work of dry law administrators, Administrator Baird at Pittsburgh, Roberts at Buffalo, Yellowley at Chicago and Wirth at Los Angeles are cited by Andrews as the real leaders in prohibition enforcement.

As for strengthening of the border patrol, it was said that the main increases will be along the Canadian and Lower California frontiers, especially at Minnesota, North Dakota and Puget Sound.

About the same time that Senator Blease was addressing the policemen, Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the anti-saloon league, was delivering that organization's second attack in a few hours on the polls being taken by many newspapers on the subject of total prohibition as opposed to beer and light wines. He told a radio audience that straw ballots "are as useless as a straw hat in a blizzard."

Only a minority of the people wants beer and wines, he said, while the majority has spoken its mind on that proposition repeatedly "not in straw votes, but in official ballots and that majority has rejected the wine and beer plea."

The practice of paying transfer companies who "tip off" prohibition agents in illegal shipments for the cost of the transportation out of government funds has been declared improper by Comptroller General McCarl.

"Information furnished as a legal duty," he ruled, "or as a matter of self-protection, does not supply a good consideration for an agreement to pay for such information."

Calling attention to this procedure of prohibition agents, Mr. McCarl wrote a letter to Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon, declaring the "impropriety of making the agreements for payment of such charges is manifest."

Because of technicalities of the present law, however, he allowed the claims for freight bills on two shipments of "medicine" which were paid for by prohibition agents, but he gave notice that no such agreements made after March 1 would be recognized.

THIRTY DAYS TO MEDITATE

Columbus—Weird and varied are the workings of a woman's mind.

And because of that, Robert Hike, 24, of Portsmouth, will have 30 days to meditate on the question which has puzzled the minds of men since time immemorial.

Hike appeared at the home of Miss Leona Crabtree, held a gun pointed at her and demanded to see Miss Crabtree's sister, of whom he was apparently enamored. But she is alleged to have loved him not.

"I'm a detective, and I've got this house surrounded," Hike barked at Miss Lona. "Let me see your sister," but when Miss Crabtree called police, they took Robert into custody and arrested him on a charge of trespassing.

HAPPENINGS IN OUR STATE

Taken Direct From the Wires by Correspondents of the United States Press Association.

Cleveland—On the eve of the return of the most far reaching indictment in the history of prohibition federal authorities here announced that 19 new arrests have been made in the investigation of the nation wide conspiracy for the distribution of alcohol. Persons arrested now total 70.

These include Herman Fuerstein, Philadelphia, arrested there Friday night after a hunt of several weeks; George Golding intelligence agent in charge of the investigation regards Fuerstein as the directing mind of the conspiracy.

Akron—Steps will be taken immediately to rebuild the Grace Reformed church which was destroyed by fire during the night, with a loss estimated at $60,000. The church was erected in 1881 and was known as "the little church around the corner." The edifice was situated in the business district.

Akron—Canned heat was held responsible for the death of Robert Barton, of Kansas City, Missouri, whose body was found in a rooming house here.

Dayton—The bodies of Mrs. Lula Taylor, a waitress, and Archie Childers, 54, believed a rejected suitor, were found in the the woman's apartment here.

Mrs. Taylor had been shot to death and a bullet had penetrated Childers' head. One hand clutched a revolver. The bodies were found by Mrs. Taylor's two young sons when they awakened. Neighbors were summoned and the police were called.

Angel Crowns Sports in Cathedral Design

New York.—A design depicting an angel crowning a victor with laurel and including groups of athletes was submitted for the stained-glass window in the sports bay of the cathedral of St. John the Divine. The design, made by Ralph A. Cram, architect of the cathedral, will be subject to revision by the committee representing amateur sports.

Two large panels are included in the design. One shows figures symbolic of polo, golf, tennis and baseball as major, with gymnastics, yachting, bowling and billiards as minor sports. The other shows horse racing, rowing, track and field and football as major sports, with skating, hockey, soccer, fencing, wrestling, pole vaulting, boxing, trap-shooting and motor boating as minor sports.

BUSY BURGLARS VISITED STORE OF ROTHMANS

Goods on Display There Appeal to Thieves as This Was Their Fourth Visit.

The Rothman Department store was entered by burglars sometime during Friday night and from the show window in which they were displayed a half-dozen ladies' coats and a half-dozen silk dresses were taken. The loss is estimated at $200 and is complete, as Mr. Rothman does not carry burglary insurance.

The thieves gained entrance by breaking the large plate glass in the south end of the store. The shattering of the pane did not arouse any one in the neighborhood and the marauders had it their own way. The night was ideal for the visitation, as it was bitterly cold and a northwest wind blew thruout the entire night. The crime was not discovered until 5:30 o'clock this morning when Harley Bush, night watchman at the Dixie Mills, discovered the broken show window and reported the fast to the police department.

The only clue to the burglary is the fact that the burglars went south on Pickaway street. One of the coat hangers was found in the front yard of John Greeneo, where it was thrown.

This is the fourth time the Rothman store has been burglarized. The last time was in November of last year, and was also on Friday night. It was thought that it would have been an easy matter to trace the burglars as there was a light fall of snow on the ground and the footprints of the night marauders would have been easily discernible.

The broken pane of glass measured 80 by 130 inches and was valued at $150. It was covered by insurance in the Hummel & Plum agency.

Mr. Rothman offers a reward of $100 for the arrest of the guilty parties.

One-Fifth of Austrians Live at State Expense

Vienna.—One-fifth of the population of Austria is living part or wholly at the expense of the state. The government has on its pay rolls the names of 190,000 federal employees, 122,000 federal pensioners, 60,000 war invalids, and 152,000 unemployed persons receiving government aid. This is a total of 524,000.

Official figures show that an average of two persons are dependent upon each of the 524,000. The estimated total consequently is 1,572,000, or considerably more than one-fifth the population.

TROY MYSTERY CLEARED AWAY BY CONFESSION

Jacob Nesbitt Admits He Killed His Wife and Put Body in the Bath Tub.

The Troy murder mystery has been solved. Jacob Nesbitt has confessed that he killed his wife, Frances, in their cottage in that city.

The confession came at the end of a five hour grilling by a Cincinnati detective, Ora Slater, and was made in the presence of two of the slayer's friends, Herbert Johnson and C. C. Willard.

He said that on the night of February 18 they quarreled and for the first time failed to make up before they went to bed. She slept upon a cot in the living room of their home. He slept in their bed.

The next morning the quarrel was resumed. And Nesbitt hit his wife—this time with his fist. Something went wrong. He saw red. He hit her again. He seized something—he does not know what—twice he brought it down upon the head of his wife. In his rage he choked her.

Presently a realization of what had done came to him. He carried his wife to the bath tub she had filled with water for her morning bath. He placed her in it.

Then he looked around. There was blood upon his pajamas—the blue pajamas she had given to him for Christmas. Down the basement steps to the furnace he stumbled. He burned his pajamas. Back again to the bathroom. He splashed water upon the face of Fran. No use. She was dead.

Nesbitt's reserve had returned. The man was himself again. He washed his hands, combed his hair, performed his morning household tasks and went to work.

This reserve, regained within a half hour after the crime. Nesbitt never dropped until Friday when he sat in his home—within a few feet of the spot upon which she had stood when he killed her.

Authorities had quizzed the husband of the murder victim for several hours. He had been unresponsive. Then, without warning, he began to cry.

"I killed my wife," he admitted. In a few minutes he was able to control himself enough to tell his story.

"We had been arguing for almost a month over business affairs. We argued all the way home from Dayton Thursday night.

Frances had nagged him. She had belittled him in front of their friends. She had boasted of her business ability. She had chided him because he was not a success as a salesman.

"That night we lost our tempers and struck each other. Fran refused to sleep with me and slept on the couch in the front room. I slept in the bed.

"The next morning Fran got up and drew her bath. The argument started again. I hit her with my fist. Then I hit her with something else.

"I saw red. I killed her. My mind is blank about what happened after that. I seem to remember taking my blue pajamas to the furnace and burning them. I put Fran in the bath tub.

"Then I washed my hands and combed his hair, fixed the furnace, swept the snow from the sidewalk and went to Dayton to work."

The approximate time of the murder was set by Nesbitt at 6:30 o'clock Friday morning, February 19.

After Nesbitt had confessed in the front room of the home he and "Fran" had fixed up so gaily last summer he was left unmolested for a few minutes. Officers ran to the Miami county jail and back again.

MEN'S DRESS

By
W. A. Churchill, Secretary
BORN TAILORS GUILD

Taking Care of Your Clothes

NO MAN can ever be well dressed who does not take proper care of his clothes. Even the man who prefers to wear them hard and replace them often will find he cannot be well groomed without giving a certain amount of attention to the upkeep of his apparel. The average man, however, buys his clothes with a view to getting good service and having them look well during their entire reign. For this reason he buys good materials, conservative styles. The dash of color and the note of originality can be secured in the accessories—socks, ties and belt that can be discarded when out of style.

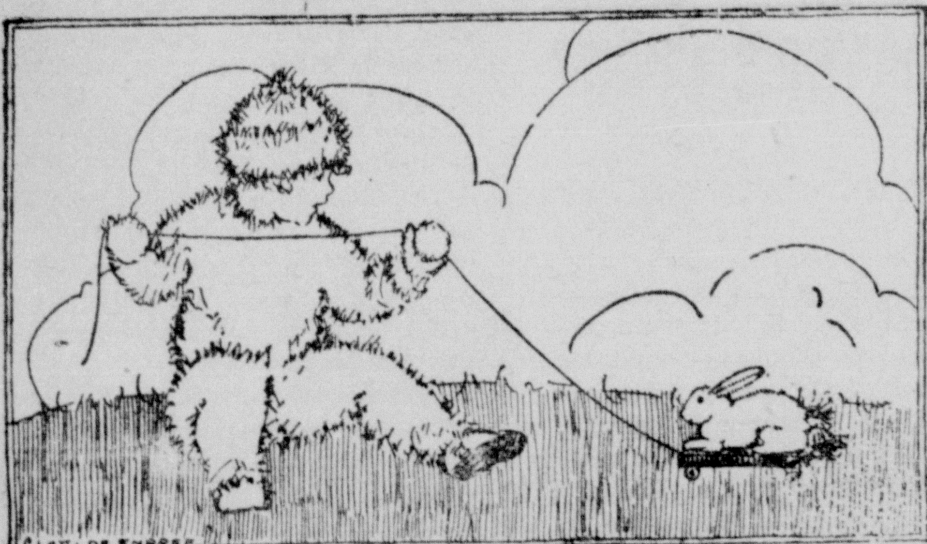

Plenty of changes is one secret of getting full returns from your clothing investments. It is poor economy to put on an everyday suit and wear it constantly and the same applies to shoes, hat and gloves.

The suit that has been worn all day is as much entitled to a good night's rest as is its owner. It should be put on hangers, and, if possible, hung out in the open and not shut up in some airless closet. Shoe trees take only a second or two to slip in and are excellent in preserving the shape of the shoe.

The value of frequent cleaning and pressing cannot be overestimated. Dirt is one of the greatest enemies to the wearing qualities of materials. Some men leave a standing order with the cleaner to pick up a suit or overcoat a week at the same time that he returns one. In this way, one's wardrobe is kept constantly in condition. A bottle of cleaning fluid kept on the bathroom shelf is a necessity. A spot of grease or simple stain should never be allowed to stand overnight. A more serious stain, however, should not be tampered with. It is best to take the garment to the cleaners for expert attention.

A Cosy Suit to Keep Him Snug

NOTHING could be prettier than a knitted suit of English Angora yarn for the small child. It is so soft and furry that it seems completely suited to a baby. The yarn is spun from the fur of Angora rabbits, snow white little animals with pink eyes that differ from our own white rabbits in that their fur attains a length of six inches. This new yarn is dyed in the prettiest shades. It makes an adorable suit for a baby in white, pale pink, pale blue or pale yellow. An older child might look charming in a suit knitted in Antwerp blue Angora yarn, which is dark, or in a blue de France, which is bright. A brown eyed child would be pretty in a suit knitted from one of the brown shades such as suede, cameo tan, cinnamon or perhaps a russet. The yarn washes so well that you do not have to think of selecting a color that will not require washing. In fact, each time it is laundered it becomes more furry. English Angora yarn is very light and, being made from fur, very warm. A little suit with cap and mittens to match would make an incomparable Christmas present for a child.

PROHIBITION

From a Middle West Crusader's Standpoint.

(By Max Buckingham, United Press Staff Correspondent. Chicago, March 11.—(UP.)—

Prohibition is here to stay and the polls being taken throughout the country by leading newspapers—polls that show a majority of approximately 10 to 1 in favor of modification of the dry laws do not represent the sentiment of the American public in the opinion of Arthur Burrage Farwell, one of the foremost prohibition crusaders of the middle west.

"The newspapers are making an honest effort to get the public sentiment," Farwell told the United Press in an interview today. "But the fact remains that most of the answers are coming from enthusiastic wets who fail to recognize that prohibition is here to stay."

Farwell declared that had a similar poll been taken while the country still had the saloons, the dries would have won a commanding victory. The wets at that time would have scoffed at the idea the dries could put through a prohibition measure. The wets wouldn't have voted then, just as the dries are failing to vote now he said.

"The youngsters, who really do not know the issues involved in this fight are turning in many of the votes in favor of modification," Farwell said. "They have grown up since the saloon evil was wiped out, consequently they do not know what betterment of conditions has been brought about through prohibition. Therefore they vote in favor of repealing the law."

The white haired patriarchal dry leader, is proud of the fact that he has been battling booze for 57 years. He is nearing 70 now and still commands many of the dry forces in Chicago while serving as the president of the Chicago law and order league.

"I am proud that my family name has been connected with the dry fight for 105 consecutive years" Farwell said. "My father was one of the first dry advocates in New England and I picked up the work where he quit."

In the days of his father he said that "rum was hell," in fact just as much so as moonshine is today.

The question arose as to whether the U. S. should not finance a nation-wide poll on the prohibition question, such as has been advocated in congress recently. Farwell chuckled at first, then grew serious:

"It will be a long time before the government will spend a great deal of money to break down the constitution under which it works."

The younger set is not suffering from the dire effects of prohibition such as wet advocates proclaim, Farwell said.

"Why, in the 12 years between 1906 and 1918, there were 56,812 bar licenses issued for places to operate between 3 p. m. and 3 a. m. in Chicago," he declared. "These bars were mostly dance halls and gathering places for the younger set. Isn't that much worse than the present day conditions?"

Its Boundaries Restricted

Oceania or Oceanica was a designation which embraced the land surface which remained after apportioning the continents of Eurasia, Africa and the Americas. The term covered Australia, the Indian archipelago and the Pacific Islands. After Australasia was set apart as a continent Oceania was restricted to the Malay archipelago and the islands of the Pacific.

Where Orchids Are Pests

Orchids, so prized by the flower connoisseur, and in almost all sections of the United States comparatively expensive, are a little short of costly pests in some parts of Porto Rico. In this island there are two species that have proved destructive to the citrus groves, growing like weeds and entangling their enormous roots over the branches of the citrus trees with a strangulation effect.

Requires Great Heat

The heat required to make portland cement is greater by many hundreds of degrees than that of the molten lava in the craters of Hawaii's volcanoes.

Why Is It?

That a woman will wear a ball gown when she doesn't care to dance, a riding habit when she wouldn't even think of getting on a horse, a golf outfit when she doesn't know how to play and wouldn't if she did, a bathing suit when the very sight of water makes her seasick, but when she gets a wedding dress she means business?—Washington Dirge.

Hairless Mice

A number of hairless mice were exhibited before the Zoological society at London. They were caught in North Longon. The mice are of pink fleshy color and except for whiskers are utterly devoid of hair.

That's Different, of Course

There is nothing truer than that blood is thicker than water, and there is no greater evidence of this than when a man goes out with blood in his eye and a club in his hand to settle some boys who are raising a disturbance in the street and when he finds out that they are his own sons: "Oh, well, boys will be boys."—Liberty Press.

Smart Effects in Milady's Neckwear

Scarfs Are Worn From One Shoulder or Wrapped About Throat.

The number of scarfs and scarf effects in the new spring collections is quite noticeable. Dresses of lace and chiffon destined for evenings at Palm Beach, have trailing filmy scarfs of chiffon in misted colors, or of lace tinted to match the frock. A dress of white silk crepe has side panels and a long shoulder scarf of black chantilly lace. These scarfs are worn from one shoulder or wrapped about the throat and flung over one or both shoulders. The dress in the sketch shows Chanel's new treatment of a scarf collar. What begins as a trimming band in crepe de chine, ends as a scarf that is brought around the neck and hangs down in back! This two-piece frock has a yoke-back and a skirt that uses the theme of the flare. In an original manner. This skirt wraps around and is caught at the side by a real pocket placed rather low. Like the skirts of so many of the new two-piece frocks, the lower edge of this one is bound. Jersey in bois de rose is used for this smart little frock.

Even coats have scarfs sometimes of self material, sometimes made of the lining silk, scarfs that tie in front under the chin or are allowed to hang loose on either side of the center-front opening of a coat. Speaking of coats leads one to a contemplation of the new wraps shown for southern wear. A great number of the coats in the southern collection show the flare, from the hips or from the shoulder, the capelet, the under-the-arm cape and the shoulder cape. In this connection of flares and capes the few straight-line coats stand out with great distinction. Almost every material is represented—homespun, tweed, kasha and kindred fabrics, fine wool rep, frisca. Several coats were indicative of the coat styles that will appear on our beaches next summer. These were straight coats of Rodler's printed linen with flat white lapin collars. And such prints—startling black, blue and red designs on an oyster ground, designs employing every color under the sun and adding a metallic thread to give the glitter.

Coats of India Prints, Flowered Peasant Cotton
 Some of the specialty shops show gayly colored coats of India prints and flowered peasant cottons in vivid dyes. They are picturesque affairs that will be seen more at the Southern resorts and in the country during the coming summer than in town. In the same effect as to design, but of more important fabric, is a coat of which Lanvin is the creator. It is made of tapestry cloth of conventional pattern, in blue, green and beige. The model flares sufficiently to give generous width at the bottom, is lined with beige crepe, and has a deep turn-over collar and a band of summer ermine all around the bottom and at the edge of the cuffs. Another coat of Paris authorship is of several shades of white. The geometric pattern, resembling stitching, is done with narrow braid on taffeta.

Some Odd Combinations
 Among the odd mixings of materials used are cretonnes combined with lace. A cretonne afternoon frock for wear about the home is trimmed with insets of black lace or with waterfall skirt frills of lace, net or chiffon. More ornamental still are black lace frocks trimmed with appliques of cretonne flowers set on with gold or silver thread.

Made in Jewels
 Copies of early Victorian jewelry lead the mode in smart things to wear in jewels. Designs of quaint charm and originality are to be found in the pieces which faithfully copy the mode of our grandmothers.

Angry Elephant Tosses Noisy Flivver in Ditch
 Batavia, Dutch East Indies.—How a mother elephant rescued her baby which had been frightened by a small American automobile, picked up the machine and hurled it into a ravine, smashing it to bits, is related in a story arriving here from Telok Betong South Sumatra.

A party driving before dawn along a primitive road through a forest was halted by a baby elephant which, apparently blinded by the headlights, refused to budge. The driver rode up to the animal and gently tried to push it out of the way. The beast, however, firmly stood its ground, but began bellowing piteously.

Presently a deep trumpeting was heard by the motorists and a huge cow elephant was seen smashing her way through the jungle. The occupants of the car jumped out and fled to safety.

The mother elephant, after having felt her young all over with her trunk, to see if it had been injured, in a rage seized the car with her trunk and sent it hurtling into the ravine. Apparently satisfied, the mother disappeared with her baby into the jungle.

SOCIAL CALENDAR

Misses Mary and Minnie Callahan, Mrs. Glenn Rader and Miss Peggie Parks will attend a bridge party given by Mrs. H. A. Woodhouse, of 1588 North Fourth street Columbus, this evening and will remain as her guests over the weekend.

Announcement is made of the marriage of Miss Cleo Hall, daughter of Mrs. Reuben Hall, of Meade, to Mr. Joseph Green, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Green of Gahanna, Ohio. The wedding took place at Newport, Kentucky, June 13, 1925. The news comes as a complete surprise to the many friends of the young couple. The bride has been employed in Kingston for the last few years where she has made many friends. The young couple will go to housekeeping on a farm in Pickaway township where the groom has been employed for the last three years. Many congratulations are extended this happy young couple in their new home.

"Bronze Lily" Newest
Freak in Flower World

New York.—Henry W. Becker, foreman in charge of greenhouses at the New York botanical garden in Bronx park, announced he has developed a bronze lily, unique among lilies native to the tropics. He has named the new variety the "Frederick S. Lee," after the president of the board of managers of the garden.

Produced after three years of effort, the lily bears bronze stripes on its leaves, which in the growing season are from nine to fourteen inches across, or about the size of other tender lily plants. It is mottled underneath with purple, red, yellow and green. The flower is a light sky blue, nine to eleven inches wide, dimensions said to be normal.

The stem is about twenty inches long, corresponding in size to any large lily of the tropical variety. It grows all the year around, according to Mr. Becker, while most tropical lilies are dormant during the winter months.

30 STATES HUNT
MINERALS IN 1925More Than Million Spent in
Quest for Oil, Gas and
Various Ores.

Urbana, Ill.—Surveys of the available supplies of oil and gas, coal, iron, structural material and other natural resources, useful in future industrial development, called for the appropriation by the several states during 1925 of more than $1,000,000. According to information compiled by Dr. M. M. Leighton, secretary of the Association of American State Geologists, more than thirty states in 1925 made surveys of mineral deposits and geological formations within their boundaries.

These surveys provide information of basic value to the industrial growth of the state. They often result in the discovery of unsuspected mineral wealth leading to the development of new industries, and in a greater recovery or conservation of resources already known.

Fundamental studies of the structure and constitution of the earth's crust, details for the most part taken from the layman but deepened with painstaking care by the geologist, have been carried on in twenty states through the agency of their state geological surveys. Such studies include the determination of the extent, thickness and character of rock formations and the mapping of known mineral deposits, matters of fundamental importance in locating and developing mines, wells for oil and gas, and water supplies, sites for power dams and reservoirs, and other enterprises.

Oil and Gas Inquiries.

Special investigations of oil and gas possibilities were conducted during the past year in Illinois, Kentucky, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Wyoming. Wildcat speculation in areas of little or no promise is being more and more effectively discouraged and in some instances wells of unusual productivity have been struck as a result of following the recommendations made in these reports.

Coal deposits were studied in Illinois, Kentucky, Ohio and Pennsylvania; iron ore in Georgia, North Carolina and Wisconsin; lead and zinc in Oklahoma; gold in Tennessee; mercury in Arizona, and various ores in Idaho, Kentucky, Pennsylvania and Wyoming.

Cement-making materials were investigated in Arizona and Kentucky, clays for ceramic products in Pennsylvania and South Carolina, building stone in Arizona, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania and South Carolina. Road-making materials were noted in Idaho, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

Water Power Studied.

Water resources were studied in seven states, from the standing of potable supplies and agricultural and industrial needs as well as water power. South Dakota started a campaign for the conservation of its artesian water, while Kentucky, New Jersey, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Tennessee and Virginia made measurements of stream flow, usually in cooperation with the United States Geological survey.

Studies of the soils, designed to aid in conserving and increasing their fertility, were carried on in Mississippi, New Jersey, Tennessee, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

In addition to these surveys of natural resources twenty states have cooperated with the United States Geological survey in the making of authoritative base maps, from which most of the features of all other maps are taken.

Attic Yields Pesne's

Painting of Christ

Berlin.—Attic exploring, now a popular pastime in Germany, has resulted in the discovery by Dr. Karl Walter, art historian of Gabrielle Pesne's painting, "The Birth of Christ," which 150 years ago was removed from St. Hedwig's Roman Catholic church in Berlin because the congregation objected to the low-cut robes of the Virgin.

Doctor Walter, rambling through two recently discovered art treasures, read that Pesne, a French painter attached to the court of Frederick the Great, had been commissioned to paint "The Birth of Christ" as an altar piece for the church.

He searched the castles of the aristocratic monarch in Potsdam and Rheinsberg, but did not find the painting. It finally was discovered in the attic of St. Hedwig's covered with cobwebs and dust.

Insect Destroys Pines

In the last few years tens of thousands of American trees—enough to build thousands of homes—have been destroyed through the invasion of the great Pacific forests by the pine beetle, an insect that in less than one year can ruin the mightiest pine tree, says Popular Science Monthly.

Evidence recently submitted to the United States senate committee on public lands showed that in a single section of 1,000,000 acres in Klamath county, Oregon, lumber destroyed by the pests would have been enough to build not less than 8,000 American residences of an average cost of $12,500 each.

She asks for a divorce and that she may be decreed the sole owner of her real estate, a farm in Hocking county, and that he, the defendant, be forever barred from any interest in her property. Abernethy & Simkins represent the plaintiff.

BARGUE "CHROMO"
IS SOLD FOR TRIFLEDealer Thought Art Expert
Was "Stung."

New York.—An art dealer here who thought he got "stung" in buying a "retouched lithograph" which he tucked away in a corner of his shop, only to sell cheaply later, is wondering whether he was right or wrong.

The "chromo," as he called it, now is claimed to be "An Arab Dealer Among His Antiques," by Charles Barge, who died in poverty in Paris. It will be shown in a Barge exhibition at the Fearon galleries.

Carl Loevenich, an art expert, discovered the painting. When he found it, the dealer deceived by its minute detail, told him it was not worth considering.

"I like to get stung," said Loevenich. "What will you take for it?"

The dealer named and got $200 as his price. Other paintings by Barge have sold for $25,000 and $30,000, so Loevenich took it.

Barge produced only about twenty oils, partly because originally he was a lithographer and started painting late in life, and partly because he was so painstaking in his work.

Even though he got good prices during his lifetime, his income was not sufficient to tide over between pictures. He died in a charitable institution after falling in a fit at the door of a Paris art dealer's shop, to whom he had applied unsuccessfully for a loan.

Two Sparrows Destroy
500 Caterpillars in a Day

St. Paul, Minn.—When English sparrows bring to their nest 500 destructive caterpillars in one day, as one pair did, they are entitled to consideration as a most useful bird, says Prof. A. G. Ruggles, Minnesota Agricultural college entomologist.

A second pair brought 500 insects of various kinds to their young in one hour. Besides, Professor Ruggles estimates, many insects were eaten by the adult birds. The birds frequently consume insect eggs equivalent to one half of their own weight.

WANTS MODELS OF
DECORATIVE LIMBS

According to a news item, Patrick Kerns of Philadelphia is reported as having advertised for the 20 loveliest pairs of ankles in the Quaker city, each model chosen to sit for a portrait or statue of her, shapely limbs, for his private salon.

Mr. Kerns, interviewed by reporters, who wished to ascertain whether he was going to start a "Follies" of his own, admitted that he was collecting evidence of beautiful ankle specimens for his own pleasure and for the sake of posterity; that for years he had believed them extinct in his city.

First, he said sadly, the flapper streak hit the girls, and they were flapping galoshes which completely ruined his artistic contemplation of limbs, and then, when fashion brought ankles in sight again, there seemed to be no shapely ones. Athletics, the wide use of sandals, and the "boyish ideals" of girls, according to the wealthy Philadelphian, have been the various causes of the scarcity of decorative limbs, and despairing of seeing them in motor busses or parks any more, he decided to collect models of his own and immortalize them for his private salon satisfaction.

"The Unholy Three" is a film adaptation of C. A. Robbins' story of the same name and its locale is New York City and vicinity.

The cast includes such famous players as Lon Chaney, Mae Busch, Matt Moore, Victor McLaglen, Harry Earles Mathew Betz.

The story opens in a cheap museum where, following a riot, three of the freaks on exhibition become a trio of crooks and assume the title of "The Unholy Three." Rosie O'Grady, who has been picking pockets in the museum joins the crooks who cover their tracks by operating a bird and animal store.

Innocent Lover Framed.

An innocent male clerk, played by Matt Moore, becomes infatuated with Rosie O'Grady (Mae Busch) and the rivalry starts between "Professor Echo" (Lon Chaney) and the clerk (Matt Moore).

Following an atrocious murder the trio escape by framing evidence against Rosie's lover. He is saved by what is almost to be considered as a miracle and two of the crooks lose their lives. The story ends with the reunion of the lovers and the regeneration of the master crook.

x HARTMAN THEATER. x
x x x x x x x x

The twentieth and latest edition of the Ziegfeld Follies arrives by special train for its single week at the Hartman theater, Columbus, Ohio commencing Monday, March 15. Its touring records since it closed its 67 capacity weeks at the New Amsterdam, New York, last fall have shattered every box office record for revenues from the Atlantic coast to the middle west.

The cast includes Johnny Dooley, Ray Dooley, Tom Lewis, Irving Fisher, Edna Leedom and Dave Stamper, Rella Winn, Kelo Bros., Dare and Wahl Berthal Belmore, Barbara Newberry, Marjorie Mae Martyn, Tommy Mack, Easter and Hazelton, the 16 Tiller girls, and many other singers, dancers and comedians with sixty-five Ziegfeld Follies girls, acclaimed as the loveliest ever assembled. Representative beauties have been selected from every quarter of the land from New England to the Pacific coast and from the northern border to the southland.

Julian Mitchell staged the production. The dialogue is by J. P. McEvoy and Gus Weinburg; the lyrics by Gene Buck; the music by Raymond Hubbard, Dave Stamper and Werner Janssen. The musical numbers include "Home Again," "Syncopating Baby" "In the Shade of Alamo," "Tiddle Along," "Titina," "I'd Like to be a Gardener in a Garden of Girls," and a poetic blend of Victor Herbert's immortal melodies.

Mr. Ziegfeld gives assurance that there are "more laughs in this 'Follies' than in its nineteen previous editions combined." Its humors were emphasized by enthusiastic reviewers in every city visited, as clean, wholesome and distinctively American, without double meanings or sly foreign equivocations; something for the whole family, young and old, to enjoy. Among the skits and satires of American life are "The Drug Store" and "A Back Porch," "The Joy Ride" and "The Picnic," by J. P. McEvoy, and "The Nagger" by Gus Weinburg. Edna Leedom and Dave Stamper have a new travesty act in which the lady adds the seductive Tondelayo to her impersonations.

The magnitude of the newest and costliest Ziegfeld Follies is emphasized by its transportation equipment which required twelve sleepers, coaches and baggage cars to be run as a de luxe special.

Matinees on Wednesday and Saturday. Mail orders now.

moned. Nesbitt's attorney, L. H. Shipman, was called.

There in the presence of authorities, his attorney and friends Nesbitt dictated his confession.

For three weeks, the Nesbitt murder has presented a baffling wall of mystery to officials who have worked feverishly to unearth a tangible clue.

The point almost had been reached where every one concerned figured the murder would remain unsolved forever.

Nesbitt himself, has been the most active in attempting to trace clues. He worked with newspapermen, and with Slater ever since he arrived to take charge of the case.

He never had been accused of the murder, and Friday really was the first time he had been questioned at any length. At the corner's inquest he answered questions in an apparent straightforward manner, and the coroner's verdict was that Mrs. Nesbitt had died of concussion of the brain, the result of having been struck by an "unknown instrument in the hands of an unknown person."

At 1:30 o'clock Friday Slater determined to play his trump card. He had everything in the Nesbitt home arranged just as it was three weeks ago when the body was found. Then he got Nesbitt and took him out there. He told him he wanted a final interview with him to determine if a last effort would not result in a clue being unearthed.

There amid the familiar surroundings and tortured by the poignant memory of his cruel deed, the husband told the detective the frightful tale and was placed under arrest.

Brevity and Wit

The son of an English clergyman named Jordan who had been taught the art of brevity: startled his father with the following wire from the university, where he was receiving his education: "S.O.S., E.S.D., R.E.V.P." The lad further distinguishes himself in reply to an anxious letter as to his final examination. "Hymn 345, verse 5, last two lines," which the anxious parent found to convey, "Sorrow vanquished, labor ended, Jordan passed."

SOUND WAVE NOW BIG HELP AT SEA

Radio Brings Marked Change in Navigation.

San Francisco.—Radio, which has dissipated the pall of loneliness that once overhung ships on the isolated parts of the high seas, also is effecting a marked change in navigation methods.

More than half of the larger boats visiting Pacific coast ports are now getting direction signals over the sound wave, and as a result the older, more cumbersome ways of figuring distances, longitude and latitude are fading.

The information that goes to the captain in his chartroom through the "direction finder" enables him to determine his exact position at sea, without reference to the ship's speed or detailed log.

A "loop," which is the antennae, is operated on bearings like a weather vane at the top of its shaft. When this is swung into a position that gives the maximum intensity of sound, determined by ear, it is pointing directly at the signaling shore station. It then is swung at right angles so that no signal whatever is received.

In this position dials and hands operating over a Sperry-gyro compass record the direction of the ship, eliminating the necessity of figuring variation because of magnetic attraction, as must be done with a compass.

Another advance in navigation creditable to the radio is the manner of giving ships at sea the correct time.

In the old days the captain set his chronometers when in port or offshore where he was within range of a flashing light signal, the dropping of a metal ball or the whine of a siren. These adjuncts are still employed, but the navigator need not depend on them. For he can get his time at stated intervals no matter in what part of the world his ship may be.

Those on the Pacific—from Alaska to Korea—are given a time signal every day at 10 p. m. San Francisco time. It has been caught from points as distant as London.

The time given to the navigator is "accurate to one part in 170,000," which in lay terms means that it is not in error more than a half second. To the average man a "second" means little; to the Mare Island naval observatory it is 1-86-400th part of a day. Time is measured much more minutely than by "seconds," however.

The observer gets his time, not from the sun as is popularly supposed, but by the movements of stars, which are invariable. If a mistake of a half-second should be made one day it would almost inevitably be corrected the next time the observer peeped through his telescope and saw a certain star pass a fixed point in the heavens, determined by a line on the telescope.

All Boys Like Cherry Pie

Nobody knows just why George Washington cut down the cherry-tree. It may have been to prove the cutting power of his new hatchet. On the other hand—and this is far more likely—he may have wished some cherries to eat, and they were too high for him to reach.

If little George were living in 1926, instead of taking a hatchet he would take a can-opener, and open a can of the luscious red fruit. As a matter of fact, most little boys, today, have neither trees nor yards, and associate cherries only with cans. For, more and more, the house-mother is finding that it is easier, more economical and practical to make the family's pies out of a can, instead of buying the fresh fruit by the basket or crate and devoting weary hours to pitting, cooking and preserving the cherries.

Cherries are one of the fussiest of all fruits to prepare for table use. Even with a patent pitter it is tedious work. The big commercial canneries now do this in such sanitary fashion, and have machines which are so successful in removing the pits, that it is foolish for the individual housewife to take this labor upon herself.

A trip through one of the great canneries at cherry-time is a fascinating excursion. One sees everywhere vast mounds of the gleaming red fruit, like heaps of glittering rubies in a treasure-cave. The various washings through which they pass seem to make them redder and brighter. It is interesting, too, to watch the big machines expertly removing the pits, and to see the perpetual stream of pitted fruit moving through another process of washing, and thence into the cans, there to be cooked, automatically sealed and cooked again.

When the housewife opens one of these cans, she has merely to add sufficient sugar, and behold—the contents of her pie are all ready to be poured upon the lower crust and covered with the upper. What a saving of time and hard work this means to her! Only the housewife of a former generation, who has toiled over innumerable cherry pies in the course of her life, can fully appreciate how blessed is the modern woman in this respect.

The economy of the ready-to-serve product, as compared with the fresh fruit, also appeals to the housewife who is thrifly interested in making her household budget stretch to the utmost. The sour red cherries, which make the best pies and delicious preserves, are put up both in large cans—known as the No. 10 size—and in a smaller-sized can. The housewife who has a small family sometimes finds the small can better suited to her purpose. But for preserving or catering on a larger scale, the No. 10 size can is the more economical. Three of this size cans of cherries more than equal the amount of good fruit one gets out of a single basket of the fresh fruit. A crate of cherries contains 10 quarts and costs $3 or $4. Three No. 10 cans of cherries can be bought at $1 each, and every bit of the fruit in the cans is edible; all the rest having been previously removed, such as pits, stems, leaves and the like. On the other hand, by the time all these things have been eliminated from a crate of cherries, one has much less of the actual fruit for one's money. And, since time has a very definite value, in these busy days, the amount of time saved by the ready-to-serve cherries should be counted in, when estimating the comparative economy of the fresh and canned products.

In the making of cherry preserves, the housewife will find it more economical and expeditious to use the canned cherries instead of the fresh. She has merely to add the right amount of sugar and re-cook the canned cherries to the correct consistency, saving herself all the time and work of preliminary preparation.

Besides the sour red cherries for preserving and pie-making, sweet red cherries and delicious white cherries are put up in ready-to-serve form, to use as a dessert. It will be found convenient to have a few cans of both varieties on hand for emergency use.

The forehanded housewife knows the convenience, too, of making a little extra pie-pastry and keeping it in a cold place, all ready to use for a hurry-up pie or batch of cherry tarts, when sudden occasion requires. And, after the pies are made, they will keep for several days in a cold place.

Cupid and the Kitten

By SDNEY BLAIR

(Copyright.)

JANET sat down at Miss Lane's desk, feeling that something very exciting certainly was going to happen. She had always rather envied Miss Lane the big mahogany desk, with its bowl of flowers and its row of the newest books. Sometimes she wondered if she would ever be in charge of that branch of the circulating library, where so many interesting people came to take out new books and chat for a moment with Miss Lane.

Janet summoned up courage sometimes to talk with some of them, to suggest a new detective story for old Mr. Hallett, or one of the solid English novels for Mrs. Jewett. But as a rule she quietly accepted the books people were returning, marked them on the proper cards, and stamped and marked the books that were being taken out, without saying anything.

Today was to be different, however. Miss Lane wasn't coming in, and she'd have to do everything herself.

Perhaps—perhaps Mr. Atwood would come in—Stanley Atwood. He was an old friend of Miss Lane's, a mining engineer, and had been to the ends of the earth. He hated having to stay in the city, and as soon as he had finished the work that kept him there he'd go away again, to stay for a year or more.

The first half of the morning passed uninterestingly enough. A few people came in, but none of them added to Janet's feeling that something exciting was going to happen. Then, as she was arranging a pile of children's books on one of the tables, a woman came hurrying in, carrying a black kitten.

"Just look at this," she cried. "This darling little cat was walking along the street, meowing so piteously—a boy threw a stone at it just as I passed—and something must be done about it."

"Oh, it is pretty," said Janet as she took the kitten. It snuggled against her and began to purr.

"It's beautiful," said the woman emphatically. "And if I didn't live with my sister-in-law I'd take it home with me, but she hates cats."

Old Mr. Hallett came in just then, and he, too, agreed that it was a beautiful cat and ought to have a home.

"I'll tell you," he said at last. "I've got just the thing. I'll telephone my sister, who lives at Mountbanks, about ten miles from here, and have her come in and get it. She has two children—"

"Children are too cruel; I won't have this cat in a home where there are children!" interrupted the woman who had discovered the cat. "They tease animals so."

"My nieces wouldn't dream of doing that—they're Girl Scouts," Mr. Hallett told her angrily. They were deep in bitter argument when Janet realized that Mr. Atwood had come in and was standing listening with some amusement.

"What's the matter?" he asked her, quite as if they had been old friends. She explained, and he offered to go to his hotel a few doors away and get some milk for the cat.

The woman who had brought the cat in finally departed, and Mr. Hallett, having telephoned to his sister, departed also, saying that he would return at two o'clock, introduce the cat and his sister, and take both away.

Atwood sat down on the edge of a table and went on talking with Janet, not just about books, but about himself and then about her, although she hardly realized the turn the conversation had taken until she had told him many things—about how she was living alone in the city, and was going to save her money so that some day she could travel, and finally—though she did not realize that—how lonely she was.

Suddenly a young girl rushed into the room.

"You steal my cat!" she cried, rushing up to Janet. "You steal my cat, my Pedro. He walks in the street for the air—you steal him!"

Janet stepped back hastily; it looked as if the excited owner of Pedro would claw her eyes out.

"But I didn't—" "You steal my cat!" Explanations were no good at all.

Janet was almost in tears when Stanley Atwood came to the rescue. Pedro's owner listened to him more readily than to Janet, even smiled coyly at him as he talked.

Pedro and his rightful owner departed at last, and Stanley turned eagerly to Janet.

"You've got to have luncheon with me after that," he told her. "Take our mutual friendship for Miss Lane as introduction and chaperon, and come along!"

And Janet went. It was two months later, after many luncheons and dinners and picnics, that he gave her another order.

"You've got to marry me and come along to China with me—I can't go without you," he said.

And Janet went.

Fish Fossils Yield Ichthyol in Texas

Dallas, Texas.—Fossilized remains of prehistoric fish, from which is produced the strange chemical called ichthyol, are to supply Texas with an ultra-modern industry.

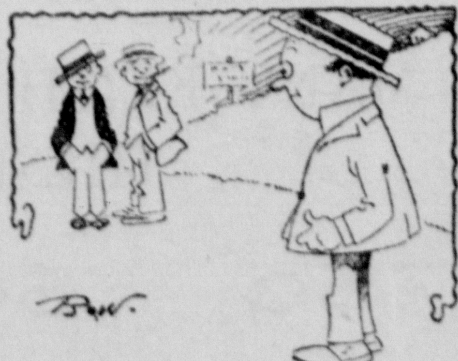

In what is believed to be an ancient ocean bed, pushed to the surface by geological action, near Burnet in west Texas, has been discovered a particularly shale from which ichthyol is extracted. This substance is a fossil oil used in medicine, especially in ointments and in treatment of skin diseases.

An ichthyol corporation has been organized and has leased 900 acres at Burnet. The chemical has sold at high as $80 a pound.

Naturalists have started a movement to get simpler terminology for their branch of science. For instance they find themselves confronted with such names as "scleroderminotermes" and "neoeurhynchotrochips" which are examples of the use of prefixes with short rather well-known early genera. It is proposed to use codes which will be understood by all naturalists and shorten the prefixes greatly.

HORSE, 30 YEARS IN CAVALRY, IS RETIRED

"Whiskers" Now Kicks Up Heels in Pasture.

Washington.—In pleasant pastures near an army post in Hawaii, a four-footed veteran of more than thirty years of honorable active service with the colors is kicking up his heels in the peace and comfort of an old soldier.

His name is "Whiskers," and he traveled down from his Montana birthplace to join the cavalry in Texas three decades ago. He is now enjoying retirement with its regular rations and assurance that he will never be called upon to work again.

"Whiskers" is just a troop horse in Uncle Sam's cavalry. There is a long list of these faithful mounts for which troopers themselves have decreed restful old age in reward for their long years of hard duty. The appropriation for this equine roll of honor comes out of the troopers' pockets if necessary, but the deeds of hero horses of the army have been officially recorded in general orders before now.

"Comanche" Heads Hero Horses.

"Comanche" probably heads that list. He was the only survivor of the massacre of the Little Big Horn, when Custer and his gallant detachment went to their death. Legend has pictured this big charger, found wandering and almost dead after the battle with seven wounds to show the part he played. The records show he was a troop horse assigned to Troop 1, Seventh cavalry, and was ridden in the fight by Capt. M. W. Keogh, who died at his chief's side. A regimental order of the Seventh, dated Fort A. Lincoln, Dakota territory, April 10, 1879, directed that Comanche be provided with suitable quarters "and that he will not be ridden by any person whatever under any circumstances, nor will he be put to any kind of work," as a tribute to comrades fallen in the fight.

That order was never violated. "Comanche" died at the cavalry post at Fort Riley, Kansas, in 1891. He lived two-thirds of his life on the retired list.

The yellowed records of the cavalry show many other famous horses, coming clear down to Pershing's "Ironhorse," bought from the French remount service to carry the general in France, and "Jeff," the big, amiable charger presented to Pershing on his return to the United States and on which he headed the victory parades of the First division in New York and Washington.

And among the old records there is none more striking than that of "Black Tom," the mighty coal black on which Colonel May, the Charles O'Malley of the American cavalry in the '40s, set tongues wagging by his mad pranks. May was arrested in Baltimore once for leaping his black thunderbolt over a cart loaded with firewood. Again he spurred Black Tom up the front stairs of a Baltimore hotel and down again after a jog about the rooms. The horse won a wager with a leap of 32 feet just after the Mexican war, against a record of 34 feet for the greatest English steeplechaser. Black Tom's greatest achievement came in the war when May jumped him over a Mexican field gun to capture the entire battery and the Mexican general, La Vaga. That deed is memorialized in the coat of arms of the Second cavalry.

Black Tom stood more than seventeen hands, a jet black Kentucky thoroughbred, and his dashing master was more than a six footer.

Taylor's Mount Lost Tail.

Another army horse of Mexican war fame was Gen. Zachary Taylor's Old Whitey, who carried his master throughout the war and was never ridden again. He was sent to Washington to be exhibited after the war and was well nigh stripped of his mane and tail on the journey by souvenir hunters.

Among famous horses of the war between the states, Robert E. Lee's Traveler perhaps is best known, although Gen. Nathaniel P. Bank's Charlie is credited in a legendary way with having shaped events of the war. He was the only horse known to have thrown General Grant. The fall put the general on crutches and kept him from the battlefield at Chickamauga. Perhaps his absence contributed to the Union disaster in that fight.

Traveler, Lee's famous gray, was a West Virginia horse and was offered to the great Confederate commander as a gift by the owner, but refused. The owner, Maj. Thomas L. Brown, then sold him and Traveler served as Lee's main reliance in the war days and his constant companion afterward. The general always stood beside him when he was shod, as the horse was nervous.

Builds Three-Unit Airship Like Mother-Bird

Berlin.—A three-unit dirigible, said to be storm-proof and resembling a giant mother-bird flying with two "babies tucked, one under each wing" has been designed by Baron Boris von Loutzkov, veteran aircraft and motor builder.

Baron Von Loutzkov asserts that his three-unit ship is three times as safe as a single-unit ship. Each is a separate dirigible. The three are hitched together by steel cables. In case of accident to one or two units, he declares, passengers and crew can clamber aboard an undamaged unit and continue one or both of the other units.

Vacation Given to Rites

In China and India many persons devote their vacation period to performing religious rites and are not reconciled to make their recreation season each year one of pleasure. The same holds true in a measure in Japan and to some extent in Germany. It is only the occidental countries which plainly make vacation a period of pleasure.

FELIX KATHE HELD GUILTY OF STEALING

Accused Confessed Theft of Automobile in September of Last Year.

Columbus, O., March 12, (UP) — A jury in common pleas court here this afternoon found Felix J. Kathe, of Chillicothe, guilty of automobile theft. Sentence was withheld pending hearing of Kathe's appeal for a new trial.

Kathe was alleged to have stolen an automobile in September, 1925. When the car was found in the possession of Gwendolyn Baughn, Washington C. H., Kathe told Assistant County Prosecutor Hicks that he had merely "loaned" it to her for several days.

Kathe's first story stated that he had bought the car from a man named "Allbright" for either $1200 or $1300 in cash. Later Kathe told in his first story, that, "Allbright" had allowed him to use the car three or four days "to try it out."

After grilling by police, Kathe confessed to the stealing of the car, according to Hicks. D. E. Owens, Chillicothe chiropractor, was arrested with Kathe and was also charged with stealing another automobile.

SAYS FORECASTING QUAKES IS FUTILE

Italian Scientist Declares Instruments Useless.

Faenza, Italy.—The ghastly list of casualties resulting from the instability of the earth's crust has reached appalling figures in the first 20 years of the Twentieth century. This is more than sufficient to give a right idea of the vast, important and complex problem of seismic forecasting, and the necessity and usefulness of solving it.

This statement was made by Raffaele Bendandi, Italian carpenter-scientist, who has made many accurate predictions of earthquakes.

America has taken the initiative by starting a vast work of preparation, tending greatly to reduce the appalling consequences that would result from an earthquake in populated areas.

Investigation Is Authorized.

Carnegie institute at Washington is carrying out the most minute researches concerning earthquakes and appropriating large sums toward establishing a chain of geophysical observatories in southern California.

The United States coast and geologic survey was empowered by congress to start an accurate investigation of the causes and the effects of the telluric movements. The engineering economic foundation is making preparations in case of a disaster in any of the large American cities. Special classes on seismology have been instituted in many universities of the New World.

All these plans, however, though carried out with the abundance of means of which America alone is capable, cannot be productive of a precise forecasting of earthquakes.

Telluric movements, which still constitute a puzzle to science, persist in being as impenetrable a mystery as ever. As the most powerful modern telescope is of no use in forecasting an eclipse or any other celestial phenomenon, likewise the most sensitive recording machinery is of no avail to the seismologist in predicting earthquakes.

The earth has a precise history which dates back for centuries. Grandiose events followed each other in succession in prehistoric ages, and their traces can be found everywhere. The earth has its laws and habits but they cannot be traced with mechanical apparatus, as so many erroneously believe.

The earthquake is not an outbreak of blind forces, but an unavoidable and forecastable movement of the earth regulated by precise laws. The forecasting of earthquakes, as often has been demonstrated, is a possible fact, but it is necessary to start from a new theoretical conception as to the origin of these phenomena. Researches being carried on in the seismological field are following the wrong track.

The forecasting of earthquakes is possible, but it is indispensable to admit in advance that the telluric activity, wherever it occurs, is closely connected by an inter-continental link and that volcanoes and earthquakes have a common origin, even though forces endangering the centers wherefrom such phenomena originate are of different and manifold character.

Quakes Are Predicted.

Think of the wonder that will be aroused the day in which my new seismographic theory, finally announced and duly expounded, will in a most clear and unmistakable way prove that the most tremendous disasters, such as those at Charleston in 1886, Martinique 1902, San Francisco 1906, Messina 1908, Yokohama 1923, and the recent one at Santa Barbara, could have been predicted a considerable time in advance, as I publicly proved in connection with the earthquake at Santa Barbara, for they all came from the same origin and cause.

To this great conception, whereby it is possible to explain and predict earthquakes, is connected the perennial sliding of the poles, a fact that has aroused such tremendous interest in the scientific world.

This cause, unique and profound, which makes the unexplored underground ferment and threaten, is positively the same one from which the orogenetical corrugation of the earth's crust originates, a corrugation that shaped the mountains throughout the centuries by means of earthquakes, bradism, eruptions and similar outbursts, whereof those which now terrify us are but episodes.

The forecasting of earthquakes is possible only by treading along this path. But as long as the American offensive against earthquakes, though involving the expenditure of huge sums, is confined to founding observatories, installing apparatus, studying effects rather than causes, it will not cause the saving of a dollar or a human life, nor will it help in forecasting the repetition of the frightful phenomenon.

SOLON SAYS LIQUOR SOLD IN CAPITOL

BLEASE OFFERS TO BUY DRINK NEATH BIG DOME

Says If Question Ever Comes Up Again He Will Vote Dry Because the People of His State Want Him To Do So--Senator Willis Says Few Wet Committees Cannot Make National Issue of Prohibition.

Washington (UP)—Bootleggers sell their wares under the very dome of the Capitol, Senator Cole L. Blease, South Carolina Democrat, told at a policemen's meeting Thursday night.

"Every day they come to me and say 'how much do you need today, Senator?'" he said.

"If you think I don't mean that, come up to the Capitol some day and I'll buy you a drink," he told a newspaper man later.

James E. Jones, director of prohibition, replied to Blease that he did not believe that "the Capitol is a rendezvous for bootleggers."

If the prohibition question ever comes before the senate again, Senator Blease told the policemen's meeting, "I am going to vote dry because the people of my state want me to, but I am also going to tell the senate when I do it, it is their vote and not mine."

The senator declared that it was a shame for policemen to brag about how many arrests for drunkenness had been made, adding that when he was a mayor he had ordered his officers to escort drunken men to their homes. He remarked that he knew of one case where a judge sentenced a man for being drunk when the judge himself "had liquor on his breath."

But as far as actually dragging the issue into the fall campaign is concerned, wets and dries both admitted the time is not yet suitable.

"A few wet communities cannot make a national issue out of prohibition," said Senator Willis, Republican dry of Ohio.

On the other hand Senator Edge, Republican wet, of New Jersey, declared, "the dry law will be an issue in several states of the east and middle west in the congressional elections. More and more sentiment against the dry laws is being stirred up every day, he said.

In connection with the check of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Andrews on the work of dry law administrators, Administrator Baird at Pittsburgh, Roberts at Buffalo, Yellowley at Chicago and Wirth at Los Angeles are cited by Andrews as the real leaders in prohibition enforcement.

As for strengthening of the border patrol, it was said that the main increases will be along the Canadian and Lower California frontiers, especially at Minnesota, North Dakota and Puget Sound.

About the same time that Senator Blease was addressing the policemen, Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the anti-saloon league, was delivering that organization's second attack in a few hours on the polls being taken by many newspapers on the subject of total prohibition as opposed to beer and light wines. He told a radio audience that straw ballots "are as useless as a straw hat in a blizzard."

Only a minority of the people wants beer and wines, he said, while the majority has spoken its mind on that proposition repeatedly "not in straw votes, but in official ballots and that majority has rejected the wine and beer plea."

The practice of paying transfer companies who "tip off" prohibition agents in illegal shipments for the cost of the transportation out of government funds has been declared improper by Comptroller General McCarl.

"Information furnished as a legal duty," he ruled, "or as a matter of self-protection, does not supply a good consideration for an agreement to pay for such information."

Calling attention to this procedure of prohibition agents, Mr. McCarl wrote a letter to Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon, declaring the "impropriety of making the agreements for payment of such charges is manifest."

Because of technicalities of the present law, however, he allowed the claims for freight bills on two shipments of "medicine" which were paid for by prohibition agents, but he gave notice that no such agreements made after March 1 would be recognized.

THIRTY DAYS TO MEDITATE

Columbus—Weird and varied are the workings of a woman's mind.

And because of that, Robert Hike, 24, of Portsmouth, will have 30 days to meditate on the question which has puzzled the minds of men since time immemorial.

Hike appeared at the home of Miss Leona Crabtree, held a gun pointed at her and demanded to see Miss Crabtree's sister, of whom he was apparently enamored. But she is alleged to have loved him not.

"I'm a detective, and I've got this house surrounded," Hike barked at Miss Lona. "Let me see your sister," but when Miss Crabtree called police, they took Robert into custody and arrested him on a charge of trespassing.

HAPPENINGS IN OUR STATE

Taken Direct From the Wires by Correspondents of the United States Press Association.

Cleveland —On the eve of the return of the most far reaching indictment in the history of prohibition federal authorities here announced that 19 new arrests have been made in the investigation of the nation wide conspiracy for the distribution of alcohol. Persons arrested now total 70.

These include Herman Fuerstein, Philadelphia, arrested there Friday night after a hunt of several weeks; George Golding intelligence agent in charge of the investigation regards Fuerstein as the directing mind of the conspiracy.

Akron—Steps will be taken immediately to rebuild the Grace Reformed church which was destroyed by fire during the night, with a loss estimated at $60,000. The church was erected in 1881 and was known as "the little church around the corner." The edifice was situated in the business district.

Akron—Canned heat was held responsible for the death of Robert Barton, of Kansas City, Missouri, whose body was found in a rooming house here.

Dayton—The bodies of Mrs. Lula Taylor, a waitress, and Archie Childers, 54, believed a rejected suitor, were found in the the woman's apartment here.

Mrs. Taylor had been shot to death and a bullet had penetrated Childers' head. One hand clutched a revolver. The bodies were found by Mrs. Taylor's two young sons when they awakened. Neighbors were summoned and the police were called.

Angel Crowns Sports in Cathedral Design

New York.—A design depicting an angel crowning a victor with laurel and including groups of athletes was submitted for the stained-glass window in the sports bay of the cathedral of St. John the Divine. The design, made by Ralph A. Cram, architect of the cathedral, will be subject to revision by the committee representing amateur sports.

Two large panels are included in the design. One shows figures symbolic of polo, golf, tennis and baseball as major, with gymnastics, yachting, bowling and billiards as minor sports.

The other shows horse racing, rowing, track and field and football as major sports, with skating, hockey, soccer, fencing, wrestling, pole vaulting, bowling, trap-shooting and motor boating as minor sports.

BUSY BURGLARS VISITED STORE OF ROTHMANS

Goods on Display There Apeal to Thieves as This Was Their Fourth Visit.

The Rothman Department store was entered by burglars sometime during Friday night and from the show window in which they were displayed a half-dozen ladies' coats and a half dozen silk dresses were taken. The loss is estimated at $200 and is complete, as Mr. Rothman does not carry burglary insurance.

The thieves gained entrance by breaking the large plate glass in the south end of the store. The shattering of the pane did not arouse any one in the neighborhood and the marauders had it their own way. The night was ideal for the visitation, as it was bitterly cold and a northwest ern wind blew thruout the entire night. The crime was not discovered until 5:30 o'clock this morning when Harley Bush, night watchman at the Dixie Mills, discovered the broken show window and reported the fast to the police department.

The only clue to the burglary is the fact that the burglars went south on Pickaway street. One of the coat hangers was found in the front yard of John Greeno, where it was thrown.

This is the fourth time the Rothman store has been burglarized. The last time was in November of last year, and was also on Friday night. It was thought that it would have been an easy matter to trace the burglars as there was a light fall of snow on the ground and the footprints of the night marauders would have been easily discernible.

The broken pane of glass measured 80 by 130 inches and was valued at $150. It was covered by insurance in the Hummel & Plum agency.

Mr. Rothman offers a reward of $100 for the arrest of the guilty parties.

One-Fifth of Austrians Live at State Expense

Vienna.—One-fifth of the population of Austria is living part or wholly at the expense of the state. The government has on its pay rolls the names of 190,000 federal employees, 122,000 federal pensioners, 60,000 war invalids, and 152,000 unemployed persons receiving government aid. This is a total of 524,000.

Other figures show that an average of two persons are dependent upon each of the 524,000. The estimated total consequently is 1,572,000, or considerably more than one-fifth the population.

TROY MYSTERY CLEARED AWAY BY CONFESSION

Jacob Nesbitt Admits He Killed His Wife and Put Body in the Bath Tub.

The Troy murder mystery has been solved. Jacob Nesbitt has confessed that he killed his wife, Frances, in their cottage in that city.

The confession came at the end of a five hour grilling by a Cincinnati detective, Ora Slater, and was made in the presence of two of the slayer's friends, Herbert Johnson and C. C. Willard.

He said that on the night of February 18 they quarreled and for the first time failed to make up before they went to bed. She slept upon a cot in the living room of their home. He slept in their bed.

The next morning the quarrel was resumed. And Nesbitt hit his wife—this time with his fist. Something went wrong. He saw red. He hit her again. He seized something—he does not know what—twice he brought it down upon the head of his wife. In his rage he choked her.

Presently a realization of what had done came to him. He carried his wife to the bath tub she had filled with water for her morning bath. He placed her in it.

Then he looked around. There was blood upon his pajamas—the blue pajamas she had given to him for Christmas. Down the basement steps to the furnace he stumbled. He burned his pajamas. Back again to the bathroom. He splashed water upon the face of Fran. No use. She was dead.

Nesbitt's reserve had returned. The man was himself again. He washed his hands, combed his hair, performed his morning household tasks and went to work.

This reserve, regained within a half hour after the crime. Nesbitt never dropped until Friday when he sat in his home—within a few feet of the spot upon which she had stood when he killed her.

Authorities had quizzed the husband of the murder victim for several hours. He had been unresponsive. Then, without warning, he began to cry.

"I killed my wife," he admitted. In a few minutes he was able to control himself enough to tell his story.

"We had been arguing for almost a month over business affairs. We argued all the way home from Dayton Thursday night.

Frances had nagged him. She had belittled him in front of their friends. She had boasted of her business ability. She had chided him because he was not a success as a salesman.

"That night we lost our tempers and struck each other. Fran refused to sleep with me and slept on the couch in the front room. I slept in the bed.

"The next morning Fran got up and drew her bath. The argument started again. I hit her with my fist. Then I hit her with something else.

"I saw red. I killed her. My mind is blank about what happened after that. I seem to remember taking my blue pajamas to the furnace and burning them. I put Fran in the bath tub.

"Then I washed my hands and combed his hair, fixed the furnace, swept the snow from the sidewalk and went to Dayton to work."

The approximate time of the murder was set by Nesbitt at 6:30 o'clock Friday morning, February 19.

After Nesbitt had confessed in the front room of the home he and "Fran" had fixed up so gaily last summer he was left unmolested for a few minutes. Officers ran to the Miami county jail and back again.

A court stenographer was summoned.

MEN'S DRESS
By
W.A. Churchill, Secretary
BORN TAILORS GUILD

Taking Care of Your Clothes

NO MAN can ever be well dressed who does not take proper care of his clothes. Even the man who prefers to wear them hard and replace them often will find he cannot be well groomed without giving a certain amount of attention to the upkeep of his apparel. The average man, however, buys his clothes with a view to getting good service and having them look well during their entire reign. For this reason he buys good materials, conservative styles. The dash of color and the note of originality can be secured in the accessories—socks, ties and belt that can be discarded when out of style.

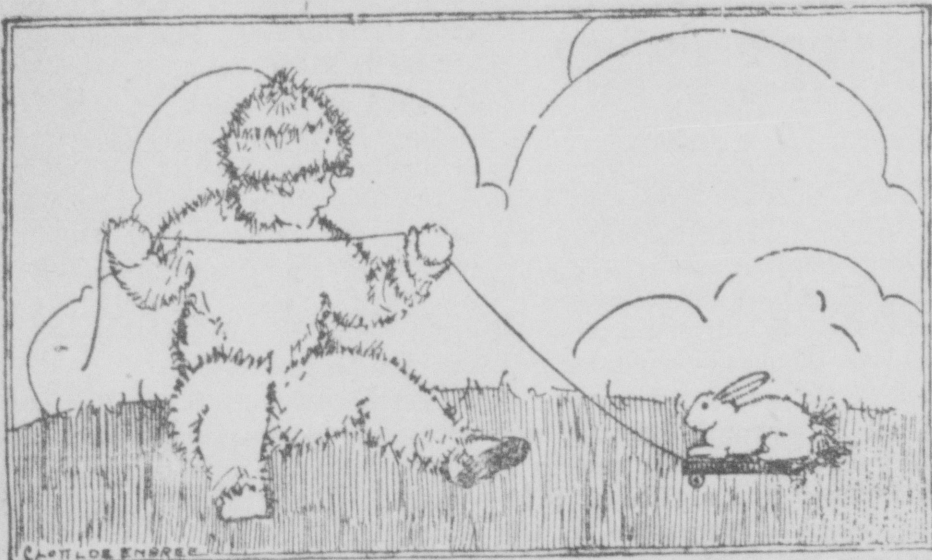

Plenty of changes is one secret of getting full returns from your clothing investments. It is poor economy to put on an everyday suit and wear it constantly and the same applies to shoes, hat and gloves.

The suit that has been worn all day is as much entitled to a good night's rest as is its owner. It should be put on hangers, and, if possible, hung out in the open and not shut up in some airless closet. Shoe trees take only a second or two to slip in and are excellent in preserving the shape of the shoe.

The value of frequent cleaning and pressing cannot be overestimated. Dirt is one of the greatest menaces to the wearing qualities of materials. Some men leave a standing order with the cleaner to pick up a suit or overcoat a week at the same time that he returns one. In this way, one's wardrobe is kept constantly in condition. A bottle of cleaning fluid kept on the bathroom shelf is a necessity. A spot of grease or simple stain should never be allowed to stand overnight. A more serious stain, however, should not be tampered with. It is best to take the garment to the cleaners for expert attention.

A Cosy Suit to Keep Him Snug

NOTHING could be prettier than a knitted suit of English Angora yarn for the small child. It is so soft and furry that it seems completely suited to a baby. The yarn is spun from the fur of Angora rabbits, snow white little animals with pink eyes that differ from our own white rabbits in that their fur attains a length of six inches. This new yarn is dyed in the prettiest shades. It makes an adorable suit for a baby in white, pale pink, pale blue or pale yellow. An older child might look charming in a suit knitted in Antwerp pure Angora yarn, which is dark, or in a blue de France, which is bright. A brown eyed child would be pretty in a suit knitted from one of the brown shades such as suede, cameo tan, cinnamon or perhaps a russet. The yarn washes so well that you do not have to think of selecting a color that will not require washing. In fact, each time it is laundered it becomes more furry. English Angora yarn is very light and, being made from fur, very warm. A little suit with cap and mittens to match would make an incomparable Christmas present for a child.

PROHIBITION

From a Middle West Crusader's Standpoint.

(By Max Buckingham, United Press Staff Correspondent. Chicago, March 11.—(UP.)—

Prohibition is here to stay and the polls being taken throughout the country by leading newspapers—polls that show a majority of approximately 10 to 1 in favor of modification of the dry laws do not represent the sentiment of the American public in the opinion of Arthur Burrage Farwell, one of the foremost prohibition crusaders of the middle west.

"The newspapers are making an honest effort to get the public sentiment," Farwell told the United Press in an interview today. "But the fact remains that most of the answers are coming from enthusiastic wets who fail to recognize that prohibition is here to stay."

Farwell declared that had a similar poll been taken while the country still had the saloons, the dries would have won a commanding victory. The wets at that time would have scoffed at the idea the dries could put through a prohibition measure. The wets wouldn't have voted then, just as the dries are failing to vote now he said.

"The youngsters, who really do not know the issues involved in this fight are turning in many of the votes in favor of modification," Farwell said. "They have grown up since the saloon evil was wiped out, consequently they do not know what betterment of conditions has been brought about through prohibition. Therefore they vote in favor of repealing the law."

The white haired patriarchal dry leader, is proud of the fact that he has been battling booze for 57 years. He is nearing 70 now and still commands many of the dry forces in Chicago while serving as the president of the Chicago law and order league.

"I am proud that my family name has been connected with the dry fight for 105 consecutive years," Farwell said. "My father was one of the first dry advocates in New England and I picked up the work where he quit."

In the days of his father he said that "rum was hell," in fact just as much so as moonshine is today.

The question arose as to whether the U. S. should finance a nation-wide poll on the prohibition question, such as has been advocated in congress recently. Farwell chuckled at first, then grew serious:

"It will be a long time before the government will spend a great deal of money to break down the constitution under which it works."

The younger set is not suffering from the dire effects of prohibition such as wet advocates proclaim, Farwell said.

"Why, in the 12 years between 1906 and 1918, there were 56,812 bar licenses issued for places to operate between 3 p. m. and 3 a. m. in Chicago," he declared. "These bars were mostly dance halls and gathering places for the younger set. Isn't that much worse than the present day conditions?"

Its Boundaries Restricted

Oceania or Oceanica was a designation which embraced the land surface which remained after apportioning the continents of Eurasia, Africa and the Americas. The term covered Australia, the Indian archipelago and the Pacific islands. After Australasia was set apart as a continent Oceania was restricted to the Malay archipelago and the islands of the Pacific.

Normalcy in Headgear

A young man has written a correct dress department to ask what kind of hat a bridegroom should wear on his honeymoon. If the young man intends to wear it afterward also, any hat three sizes too small at the time of the wedding will do.—Arkansas Gazette.

Where Orchids Are Pests

Orchids, so prized by the flower connoisseur, and in almost all sections of the United States comparatively expensive, are a little short of costly pests in some parts of Porto Rico. In this island there are two species that have proved destructive to the citrus groves, growing like weeds and entangling their enormous roots over the branches of the citrus trees with a strangulation effect.

Requires Great Heat

The heat required to make portland cement is greater by many hundreds of degrees than that of the molten lava in the craters of Hawaii's volcanoes.

Why Is It?

That a woman will wear a ball gown when she doesn't care to dance, a riding habit when she wouldn't even think of getting on a horse, a golf outfit when she doesn't know how to play and wouldn't if she did, a bathing suit when the very sight of water makes her seasick, but when she gets a wedding dress she means business?—Washington Dirge.

Hairless Mice

A number of hairless mice were exhibited before the Zoological society at London. They were caught in North Longoni. The mice are of pink fleshy color and except for whiskers are utterly devoid of hair.

That's Different, of Course

There is nothing truer than that blood is thicker than water, and there is no greater evidence of this than when a man goes out with blood in his eye and a club in his hand to settle some boys who are raising a disturbance in the street and when he finds out that they are his own sons: "Oh, well, boys will be boys."—Liberty Press.

Sugar in Early Days

Sugar was found in the East Indies by Nearchus, admiral of Alexander the Great, in the year 325 B. C. An eastern people in alliance with Pompey the Great, the famous Roman general, used the juice of sugarcane as a common beverage.

Smart Effects in Milady's Neckwear

Scarfs Are Worn From One Shoulder or Wrapped About Throat.

The number of scarfs and scarf effects in the new spring collections is quite noticeable. Dresses of lace and chiffon destined for evenings at Palm Beach, have trailing filmy scarfs of chiffon in misted colors, or of lace tinted to match the frock. A dress of white silk crepe has side panels and a long shoulder scarf of black chantilly lace. These scarfs are worn from one shoulder or wrapped about the throat and flung over one or both shoulders. The dress in the sketch shows Chanel's new treatment of a scarf collar. What begins as a trimming band in crepe de chine, ends as a scarf that is brought around the neck and hangs down in back! This two-piece frock has a yoke-back and a skirt that uses the theme of the flare in an original manner. This skirt wraps around and is caught at the side by a real pocket placed rather low. Like the skirts of so many of the new two-piece frocks, the lower edge of this one is bound. Jersey in bois de rose is used for this smart little frock.

Even coats have scarfs sometimes of self material, sometimes made of the lining silk, scarfs that tie in front under the chin or are allowed to hang loose on either side of the center-front opening of a coat.

Speaking of coats leads one to a contemplation of the new wraps shown for southern wear. A great number of the coats in the southern collection show the flare, from the hips or from the shoulder, the capelet, the under-arm cape and the shoulder cape. In this connection of flares and capes the few straight-line coats stand out with great distinction. Almost every material is represented—homespun, tweed, kasha and kindred fabrics, fine wool rep, frisca. Several coats were indicative of the coat styles that will appear on our beaches next summer. These were straight coats of Rodier's printed linen with flat white lapin collars. And such prints—startling black, blue and red designs on an oyster ground, designs employing every color under the sun and adding a metallic thread to give the glitter.

Coats of India Prints, Flowered Peasant Cotton

Some of the specialty shops show gayly colored coats of India prints and flowered peasant cottons in vivid dyes. They are picturesque affairs that will be seen more at the Southern resorts and in the country during the coming summer than in town. In the same effect as to design, but of more important fabric, is a coat of which Lanvin is the creator. It is made of tapestry cloth of conventional pattern, in blue, green and beige. The model flares sufficiently to give generous width at the bottom, is lined with beige crepe, and has a deep turnover collar and a band of summer ermine all around the bottom and at the edge of the cuffs. Another coat of Paris authorship is of several shades of white. The geometric pattern, resembling stitching, is done with narrow braid on taffeta.

Some Odd Combinations

Among the odd mixings of materials used are cretonnes combined with lace. A cretonne afternoon frock for wear about the home is trimmed with insets of black lace or with waterfall skirt frills of lace, net or chiffon. More ornamental still are black lace frocks trimmed with appliques of cretonne flowers set on with gold or silver thread.

Made in Jewels

Copies of early Victorian jewelry lead the mode in smart things to wear in jewels. Designs of quaint charm and originality are to be found in the pieces which faithfully copy the mode of our grandmothers.

Angry Elephant Tosses Noisy Flivver in Ditch

Batavia, Dutch East Indies.--How a mother elephant rescued her baby which had been frightened by a small American automobile, picked up the machine and hurled it into a ravine, smashing it to bits, is related in a story arriving here from Telok Betong, South Sumatra.

A party driving before dawn along a primitive road through a forest was halted by a baby elephant which, apparently blinded by the headlight, refused to budge. The driver rode up to the animal and gently tried to push it out of the way. The beast, however, firmly stood its ground, but began bellowing piteously.

Presently a deep trumpeting was heard by the motorists and a huge cow elephant was seen smashing her way through the jungle. The occupants of the car jumped out and fled to safety.

The mother elephant, after having felt her young all over with her trunk, to see if it had been injured, in a rage seized the car with her trunk and sent it hurtling into the ravine. Apparently satisfied, the mother disappeared with her baby into the jungle.

Many congratulations are extended this happy young couple in their new home.

"Bronze Lily" Newest
Freak in Flower World

New York.—Henry W. Becker, foreman in charge of greenhouses at the New York botanical garden in Bronx park, announced he has developed a bronze lily, unique among lilies native to the tropics. He has named the new variety the "Frederick S. Lee," after the president of the board of managers of the garden.

Produced after three years of effort, the lily bears bronze stripes on its leaves, which in the growing season are from nine to fourteen inches across, or about the size of other tender lily plants. It is mottled underneath with purple, red, yellow and green. The flower is a light sky blue, nine to eleven inches wide, dimensions said to be normal.

The stem is about twenty inches long, corresponding in size to any large lily of the tropical variety. It grows all the year around, according to Mr. Becker, while most tropical lilies are dormant during the winter months.

30 STATES HUNT
MINERALS IN 1925More Than Million Spent in
Quest for Oil, Gas and
Various Ores.

Urbana, Ill.—Surveys of the available supplies of oil and gas, coal, iron, structural material and other natural resources, useful in future industrial development, called for the appropriation by the several states during 1925 of more than $1,000,000. According to information compiled by Dr. M. M. Leighton, secretary of the Association of American State Geologists, more than thirty states in 1925 made surveys of mineral deposits and geological formations within their boundaries.

These surveys provide information of basic value to the industrial growth of the state. They often result in the discovery of unsuspected mineral wealth leading to the development of new industries, and in a greater recovery or conservation of resources already known.

Fundamental studies of the structure and constitution of the earth's crust, details for the most part hidden from the layman but deciphered with painstaking care by the geologist, have been carried on in twenty states through the agency of their state geological surveys. Such studies include the determination of the extent, thickness and character of rock formations and the mapping of known mineral deposits, matters of fundamental importance in locating and developing mines, wells for oil and gas, and water supplies, sites for power dams and reservoirs, and other enterprises.

Oil and Gas Inquiries.

Special investigations of oil and gas possibilities were conducted during the past year in Illinois, Kentucky, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Wyoming. Wildcat speculation in areas of little or no promise is being more and more effectively discouraged and in some instances wells of unusual productivity have been struck as a result of following the recommendations made in these reports.

Coal deposits were studied in Illinois, Kentucky, Ohio and Pennsylvania; iron ore in Georgia, North Carolina and Wisconsin; lead and zinc in Oklahoma; gold in Tennessee; mercury in Arizona, and various ores in Idaho, Kentucky, Pennsylvania and Wyoming.

Cement-making materials were investigated in Arizona and Kentucky, clays for ceramic products in Pennsylvania and South Carolina, building stone in Arizona, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania and South Carolina. Road-making materials were noted in Idaho, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

Water Power Studied.

Water resources were studied in seven states, from the standing of potable supplies and agricultural and industrial needs as well as water power. South Dakota started a campaign for the conservation of its artesian water, while Kentucky, New Jersey, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Tennessee and Virginia made measurements of stream flow, usually in co-operation with the United States Geological survey.

Studies of the soils, designed to aid in conserving and increasing their fertility, were carried on in Mississippi, New Jersey, Tennessee, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

In addition to these surveys of natural resources twenty states have co-operated with the United States Geological survey in the making of authoritative base maps, from which most of the features of all other maps are taken.

Attic Yields Pesne's
Painting of Christ

Berlin—Attic exploring, now a popular pastime in Germany, has resulted in the discovery by Dr. Karl Walter, art historian of Gabrielle Pesne's painting, "The Birth of Christ," which 150 years ago was removed from St. Hedwig's Roman Catholic church in Berlin because the congregation objected to the low-cut robes of the Virgin.

Doctor Walter, rambling through two recently discovered art treasures, read that Pesne, a French painter attached to the court of Frederick the Great, had been commissioned to paint "The Birth of Christ" as an altar piece for the church.

He searched the castles of the aristocratic monarch in Potsdam and Rheinsberg, but did not find the painting. It finally was discovered in the attic of St. Hedwig's covered with cobwebs and dust.

Insect Destroys Pines

In the last few years tens of thousands of American trees—enough to build thousands of homes—have been destroyed through the invasion of the great Pacific forests by the pine beetle, an insect that in less than one year can ruin the mightiest pine tree, says Popular Science Monthly.

Evidence recently submitted to the United States senate committee on public lands showed that in a single section of 1,000,000 acres in Klamath county, Oregon, lumber destroyed by the pests would have been enough to build not less than 8,000 American residences of an average cost of $12,500 each.

BARGUE "CHROMO"
IS SOLD FOR TRIFLEDealer Thought Art Expert
Was "Stung."

New York.—An art dealer here who thought he got "stung" in buying a "retouched lithograph" which he tucked away in a corner of his shop, only to sell cheaply later, is wondering whether he was right or wrong.

The "chromo," as he called it, now is claimed to be "An Arab Dealer Among His Antiques," by Charles Barge, who died in poverty in Paris. It will be shown in a Barge exhibition at the Fearon galleries.

Carl Loevenich, an art expert, discovered the painting. When he found it, the dealer deceived by its minute detail, told him it was not worth considering.

"I like to get stung," said Loevenich. "What will you take for it?" The dealer named and got $200 as his price. Other paintings by Barge have sold for $25,000 and $30,000, so Loevenich took it.

Barge produced only about twenty oils, partly because originally he was a lithographer and started painting late in life, and partly because he was so painstaking in his work.

Even though he got good prices during his lifetime, his income was not sufficient to tide over between pictures. He died in a charitable institution after falling in a fit at the door of a Paris art dealer's shop, to whom he had applied unsuccessfully for a loan.

Two Sparrows Destroy
500 Caterpillars in a Day

St. Paul, Minn.—When English sparrows bring to their nest 500 destructive caterpillars in one day, as one pair did, they are entitled to consideration as a most useful bird, says Prof. A. G. Ruggles, Minnesota Agricultural college entomologist.

A second pair brought 500 insects of various kinds to their young in one hour. Besides, Professor Ruggles estimates, many insects were eaten by the adult birds. The birds frequently consume insect eggs equivalent to one half of their own weight.

WANTS MODELS OF
DECORATIVE LIMBS

According to a news item, Patrick Kerns of Philadelphia is reported as having advertised for the 20 loveliest pairs of ankles in the Quaker city, each model chosen to sit for a portrait or statue of her shapely limbs, for his private salon.

Mr. Kerns, interviewed by reporters, who wished to ascertain whether he was going to start a "Follies" of his own, admitted that he was collecting evidence of beautiful ankle specimens for his own pleasure and for the sake of posterity; that for years he had believed them extinct in his city.

First, he said sadly, the flapper streak hit the girls, and they were dapping galoshes which completely ruined his artistic contemplation of limbs, and then, when fashion brought ankles in sight again, there seemed to be no shapely ones. Athletics, the wide use of sandals, and the "boyish ideals" of girls, according to the wealthy Philadelphian, have been the various causes of the scarcity of decorative limbs, and despairing of seeing them in motor busses or parks any more, it appears, he decided to collect models of his own and immortalize them for his private salon satisfaction.

Some firms advertise by mailing circulars. Pickaway County has about 5,000 homes. Circulars mailed to each home costs the sender about $150.

Money spent in this manner must be added to the overhead expense and the customer pays that expense.

The Circleville Welding Co.'s policy has always been to reduce expense and give the customer the benefit of the saving. Having been in business for the past six years we need no introduction. All the leading industries of Circleville and the many surrounding towns have their work done here. Why not you. We don't do a cheap job merely to meet competition but do you a real 100 percent job at as a reasonable price as possible.

New York.—John E. Andrus, formerly of Minneapolis, known here as the world's richest straphanger, is eighty-five years old, but still has to earn his living, he says.
"What's a million these days?" asked the reputed owner of $100,000,000. He can't retire and take things easy, like John D. Rockefeller, he explains, "because he's rich and can afford to take things easy, but I have to make my own living."
Mr. Andrus goes to work every day to the financial district on the subway. He says he hasn't had to see a doctor since he started traveling underground, and that the noise helps him to think.

AMUSEMENTS

Tod Browning's "The Unholy Three" a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production that has been hailed as the greatest crook film of many years will be seen next week at the Met theater.

Browning has long been famous as a director of underworld stories and he is said to have excelled all past performances in the making of this thrilling melodrama.

"It's pure melodrama," says Browning, "but there is no villain with a mortgage and there is no widow whose home is about to be taken from her. Also there is no great storm scene and no erring daughter kicked out to the mercy of the raging elements by an enraged father."

New York Crook Film.

"The Unholy Three" is a film adaptation of C. A. Robbins' story of the same name and its locale is New York City and vicinity.

The cast includes such famous players as Lon Chaney, Mae Busch, Matt Moore, Victor McLaglen, Harry Earles Mathew Betz.

The story opens in a cheap museum where, following a riot, three of the freaks on exhibition become a trio of crooks and assume the title of "The Unholy Three." Rosie O'Grady, who has been picking pockets in the museum joins the crooks who cover their tracks by operating a bird and animal store.

Innocent Lover Framed.

An innocent male clerk, played by Matt Moore, becomes infatuated with Rosie O'Grady (Mae Busch) and the rivalry starts between "Professor Echo" (Lon Chaney) and the clerk (Matt Moore).

Following an atrocious murder the trio escape by framing evidence against Rosie's lover. He is saved by what is almost to be considered as a miracle and two of the crooks lose their lives. The story ends with the reunion of the lovers and the regeneration of the master crook.

The film is filled with heart interest and a large amount of comedy.

The twentieth and latest edition of the Ziegfeld Follies arrives by special train for its single week at the Hartman theater, Columbus, Ohio commencing Monday, March 15. Its touring records since it closed its 67 capacity weeks at the New Amsterdam, New York, last fall have shattered every box office record for revenues from the Atlantic coast to the middle west.

The cast includes Johnny Dooley, Ray Dooley, Tom Lewis, Irving Fisher, Edna Leedom and Dave Stamper, Rella Winn, Kelo Bros., Dare and Wahl Berthal Belmore, Barbara Newberry, Marjorie Mae Martyn, Tommy Mack, Easter and Hazelton, the 16 Tiller girls, and many other singers, dancers and comedians with sixty-five Ziegfeld Follies girls, acclaimed as the loveliest ever assembled. Representative beauties have been selected from every quarter of the land from New England to the Pacific coast and from the northern border to the southland.

Julian Mitchell staged the production. The dialogue is by J. P. McEvoy and Gus Weinburg; the lyrics by Gene Buck; the music by Raymond Hubbell, Dave Stamper and Werner Janssen. The musical numbers include "Home Again," "Syncopating Baby" "In the Shade of Alamo," "Tiddle Along," "Titina," "I'd Like to be a Gardener in a Garden of Girls," and a poetic blend of Victor Herbert's immortal melodies.

Mr. Ziegfeld gives assurance that there are "more laughs in this 'Follies' than in its nineteen previous editions combined." Its humor was emphasized by enthusiastic reviewers in every city visited, as clean, wholesome and distinctively American, without double meanings or sly foreign equivocations; something for the whole family, young and old, to enjoy. Among the skits and satires of American life are "The Drug Store" and "A Back Porch," "The Joy Ride" and "The Picnic," by J. P. McEvoy, and "The Nagger" by Gus Weinburg. Edna Leedom and Dave Stamper have a new travesty act in which the lady adds the seductive Tondelayo to her impersonations.

The magnitude of the newest and costliest Ziegfeld Follies is emphasized by its transportation equipment which required twelve sleepers, coaches and baggage cars to be run as a de luxe special.

TROY MYSTERY
CLEARED AWAY
BY CONFESSION

moned. Nesbitt's attorney, L. H. Shipman, was called.

There in the presence of authorities, his attorney and friends Nesbitt dictated his confession.

For three weeks, the Nesbitt murder has presented a baffling wall of mystery to officials who have worked feverishly to unearth a tangible clue.

The point almost had been reached where every one concerned figured the murder would remain unsolved forever.

Nesbitt himself, has been the most active in attempting to trace clues. He worked with newspapermen, and with Slater ever since he arrived to take charge of the case.

He never had been accused of the murder, and Friday really was the first time he had been questioned at any length. At the corner's inquest he answered questions in an apparent straightforward manner, and the coroner's verdict was that Mrs. Nesbitt had died of concussion of the brain, the result of having been struck by an "unknown instrument in the hands of an unknown person."

At 1:30 o'clock Friday Slater determined to play his trump card. He had everything in the Nesbitt home arranged just as it was three weeks ago when the body was found. Then he got Nesbitt and took him out there. He told him he wanted a final interview with him to determine if a last effort would not result in a clue being unearthed.

There amid the familiar surroundings and tortured by the poignant memory of his cruel deed, the husband told the detective the frightful tale and was placed under arrest.

Brevity and Wit

The son of an English clergyman named Jordan who had been taught the art of brevity: startled his father with the following wire from the university, where he was receiving his education: "S.O.S., £S.D., R.E.V.P." The lad further distinguishes himself in reply to an anxious letter as to his final examination. "Hymn 345, verse 5, last two lines," which the anxious parent found to convey, "Sorrow vanquished, labor ended, Jordan passed."

SOUND WAVE NOW
BIG HELP AT SEA

Radio Brings Marked Change in Navigation.

San Francisco.—Radio, which has dissipated the pall of loneliness that once overhung ships on the isolated parts of the high seas, also is effecting a marked change in navigation methods.

More than half of the larger boats visiting Pacific coast ports are now getting direction signals over the sound wave, and as a result the older, more cumbersome ways of figuring distances, longitude and latitude are fading.

The information that goes to the captain in his chartroom through the "direction finder" enables him to determine his exact position at sea, without reference to the ship's speed or detailed log.

A "loop," which is the antennae, is operated on bearings like a weather vane at the top of its shaft. When this is swung into a position that gives the maximum intensity of sound, determined by ear, it is pointing directly at the signaling shore station. It then is swung at right angles so that no signal whatever is received.

In this position dials and hands operating over a Sperry-gyro compass record the direction of the ship, eliminating the necessity of figuring variation because of magnetic attraction, as must be done with a compass.

Another advance in navigation creditable to the radio is the manner of giving ships at sea the correct time.

In the old days the captain set his chronometers when in port or offshore where he was within range of a flashing light signal, the dropping of a metal ball or the whine of a siren. These adjuncts are still employed, but the navigator need not depend on them. For he can get his time at stated intervals no matter in what part of the world his ship may be.

Those on the Pacific—from Alaska to Korea—are given a time signal every day at 10 p. m. San Francisco time. It has been caught from points as distant as London.

The time given to the navigator is "accurate to one part in 170,000," which in lay terms means that it is not in error more than a half second. To the average man a "second" means little; to the Mare Island naval observatory it is 1-86-400th part of a day. Time is measured much more minutely than by "seconds," however.

The observer gets his time, not from the sun as is popularly supposed, but by the movements of stars, which are invariable. If a mistake of a half-second should be made one day it would almost inevitably be corrected the next time the observer peeped through his telescope and saw a certain star pass a fixed point in the heavens, determined by a line on the telescope.

All Boys Like Cherry Pie

N OBODY knows just why George Washington cut down the cherry-tree. It may have been to prove the cutting power of his new hatchet. On the other hand—and this is far more likely—he may have wished some cherries to eat, and they were too high for him to reach.

If little George were living in 1926, instead of taking a hatchet he would take a can-opener, and open a can of the luscious red fruit. As a matter of fact, most little boys, today, have neither trees nor yards, and associate cherries only with cans. For, more and more, the house-mother is finding that it is easier, more economical and practical to make the family's pies out of a can, instead of buying the fresh fruit by the basket or crate and devoting weary hours to pitting, cooking and preserving the cherries.

Cherries are one of the fussiest of all fruits to prepare for table use. Even with a patent pitter it is tedious work. The big commercial canneries now do this in such sanitary fashion, and have machines which are so successful in removing the pits, that it is foolish for the individual housewife to take this labor upon herself.

A trip through one of the great canneries at cherry-time is a fascinating excursion. One sees everywhere vast mounds of the gleaming red fruit, like heaps of glittering rubies in a treasure-cave. The various washings through which they pass seem to make them redder and brighter. It is interesting, too, to watch the big machines expertly removing the pits, and to see the perpetual stream of pitted fruit moving through another process of washing, and thence into the cans, there to be cooked, automatically sealed and cooked again.

When the housewife opens one of these cans, she has merely to add sufficient sugar, and behold—the contents of her pie are all ready to be poured upon the lower crust and covered with the upper. What a saving of time and hard work this means to her! Only the housewife of a former generation, who has toiled over innumerable cherry pies in the course of her life, can fully appreciate how blessed is the modern woman in this respect.

The economy of the ready-to-serve product, as compared with the fresh fruit, also appeals to the housewife who is thriftyly interested in making her household budget stretch to the utmost. The sour red cherries, which make the best pies and delicious preserves, are put up both in large cans—known as the No. 10 size—and in a smaller-sized can. The housewife who has a small family sometimes finds the small can better suited to her purpose. But for preserving or catering on a larger scale, the No. 10 size can is the more economical. Three of this size cans of cherries more than equal the amount of good fruit one gets out of a single basket of the fresh fruit. A crate of cherries contains 10 quarts and costs $3 or $4. Three No. 10 cans of cherries can be bought at $1 each, and every bit of the fruit in the cans is edible; all the rest having been previously removed, such as pits, stems, leaves and the like. On the other hand, by the time all these things have been eliminated from a crate of cherries, one has much less of the actual fruit for one's money. And, since time has a very definite value, in these busy days, the amount of time saved by the ready-to-serve cherries should be counted in, when estimating the comparative economy of the fresh and canned products.

In the making of cherry preserves, the housewife will find it more economical and expeditious to use the canned cherries instead of the fresh. She has merely to add the right amount of sugar and re-cook the canned cherries to the correct consistency, saving herself all the time and work of preliminary preparation.

Besides the sour red cherries for preserving and pie-making, sweet red cherries and delicious white cherries are put up in ready-to-serve form, to use as a dessert. It will be found convenient to have a few cans of both varieties on hand for emergency use.

The forehanded housewife knows the convenience, too, of making a little extra pie-pastry and keeping it in a cold place, all ready to use for a hurry-up pie or batch of cherry tarts, when sudden occasion requires. And, after the pies are made, they will keep for several days in a cold place.

Cupid and the Kitten

By SDNEY BLAIR

(Copyright.)

JANET sat down at Miss Lane's desk, feeling that something very exciting certainly was going to happen. She had always rather envied Miss Lane the big mahogany desk, with its bowl of flowers and its row of the newest books. Sometimes she wondered if she would ever be in charge of that branch of the circulating library, where so many interesting people came to take out new books and chat for a moment with Miss Lane.

Janet summoned up courage sometimes to talk with some of them, to suggest a new detective story for old Mr. Hallett, or one of the solid English novels for Mrs. Jewett. But as a rule she quietly accepted the books people were returning, marked them on the proper cards, and stamped and marked the books that were being taken out, without saying anything.

Today was to be different, however. Miss Lane wasn't coming in, and she'd have to do everything herself.

Perhaps—perhaps Mr. Atwood would come in—Stanley Atwood. He was an old friend of Miss Lane's, a mining engineer, and had been to the ends of the earth. He hated having to stay in the city, and as soon as he had finished the work that kept him there he'd go away again, to stay for a year or more.

The first half of the morning passed uninterestingly enough. A few people came in, but none of them added to Janet's feeling that something exciting was going to happen. Then, as she was arranging a pile of children's books on one of the tables, a woman came hurrying in, carrying a black kitten.

"Just look at this," she cried. "This darling little cat was walking along the street, meowing so piteously—a boy threw a stone at it just as I passed—and something must be done about it."

"Oh, it is pretty," said Janet as she took the kitten. It snuggled against her and began to purr.

"It's beautiful!" said the woman emphatically. "And if I didn't live with my sister-in-law I'd take it home with me, but she hates cats."

Old Mr. Hallett came in just then, and he, too, agreed that it was a beautiful cat and ought to have a home.

"I'll tell you," he said at last. "I've got just the thing. I'll telephone my sister, who lives at Mountbarns, about ten miles from here, and have her come in and get it. She has two children—"

"Children are too cruel! I won't have this cat in a home where there are children!" interrupted the woman who had discovered the cat. "They tease animals so."

"My nieces wouldn't dream of doing that—they're Girl Scouts," Mr. Hallett told her angrily. They were deep in bitter argument when Janet realized that Mr. Atwood had come in and was standing listening with some amusement.

"What's the matter?" he asked her, quite as if they had been old friends. She explained, and he offered to go to his hotel a few doors away and get some milk for the cat.

The woman who had brought the cat in finally departed, and Mr. Hallett, having telephoned to his sister, departed also, saying that he would return at two o'clock. Introduce the cat and his sister, and take both away.

Atwood sat down on the edge of a table and went on talking with Janet, not just about books, but about himself and then about her, although she hardly realized the turn the conversation had taken until she had told him many things—about how she was living alone in the city, and was going to save her money so that some day she could travel, and finally—though she did not realize that—how lonely she was.

Suddenly a young girl rushed into the room.

"You steal my cat!" she cried, rushing up to Janet. "You steal my cat, my Pedro. He walk in the street for the air—you steal him!"

Janet stepped back hastily. It looked as if the excited owner of Pedro would claw her eyes out.

"But I didn't—" "You steal my cat!" Explanations were no good at all.

Janet was almost in tears when Stanley Atwood came to the rescue. Pedro's owner listened to him more readily than to Janet, even smiled coyly at him as he talked.

Pedro and his rightful owner departed at last, and Stanley turned eagerly to Janet.

"You've got to have luncheon with me after that," he told her. "Take our mutual friendship for Miss Lane as introduction and chaperon, and some along!"

And Janet went. It was two months later, after many luncheons and dinners and picnics, that he gave her another order.

"You've got to marry me and come along to China with me—I can't go without you," he said.

And Janet went.

WASHINGTON SPECIALS

Washington, March 11.—(UP.)—The Chesapeake & Ohio railroad has acted like a "dog in the manger" in opposing the proposed consolidation of the Norfolk & Western and the Virginian railway properties, a brief by the Virginian filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission said in supporting the merger.

The Chesapeake & Ohio also filed its brief of intervention today opposing approval of the merger by the commission on the ground it is contrary to the tentative consolidation plan which would merge the Virginian with the C. & O.

Demand for the withdrawal of diplomatic recognition of Mexico as a result of expulsion of American citizens because of their religious teachings, was made in a resolution introduced in the House today by Representative Boylan, New York, Democrat.

Navy and Marine circles kept their own counsel today as far as public expressions on the arrest of Colonel Williams at San Diego was concerned. Marine headquarters had no report yet, it was said. Privately they suggested that it was scarcely the ethical thing in navy society to have one's host arrested, but qualified this observation with the hint that there must have been unusual provocation for Butler to take this step.

Fish Fossils Yield Ichthyol in Texas

Dallas, Texas.—Fossilized remains of prehistoric fish, from which is produced the strange chemical called ichthyol, are to supply Texas with an ultra-modern industry.

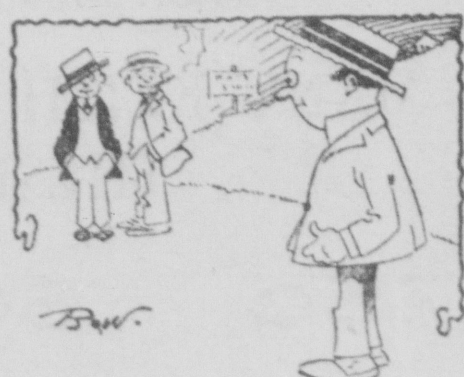

In what is believed to be an ancient ocean bed, pushed to the surface by geological action, near Burnet in west Texas, has been discovered a particularly shale from which ichthyol is extracted. This substance is a fossil oil used in medicine, especially in ointments and in treatment of skin diseases.

An ichthyol corporation has been organized and has leased 900 acres near Burnet. The chemical has sold as high as $80 a pound.

New Type of Light Rays Is Discovered

London.—The discovery of a new type of rays, supposed to lie between the ultra-violet and X-rays, is announced by C. E. Wynn Williams of the University of North Wales at Bangor. It is said the new rays penetrate the air for several inches, but are stopped by all solids, even by gold leaf, while X-rays can penetrate a half-inch of lead and the recently discovered Millikan rays pass through six feet of lead.

Simpler Names Wanted

Naturalists have started a movement to get simpler terminology for their branch of science. For instance they find themselves confronted with such names as "sclerodermotermes" and "neoeurhynchothrips" which are examples of the use of prefixes with short rather well-known early genera. It is proposed to use codes which will be understood by all naturalists and shorten the prefixes greatly.

HORSE, 30 YEARS IN CAVALRY, IS RETIRED

"Whiskers" Now Kicks Up
Heels in Pasture.

Washington.—In pleasant pastures near an army post in Hawaii, a four-footed veteran of more than thirty years of honorable active service with the colors is kicking up his heels in the peace and comfort of an old soldier.

His name is "Whiskers," and he traveled down from his Montana birthplace to join the cavalry in Texas three decades ago. He is now enjoying retirement with its regular rations and assurance that he will never be called upon to work again.

"Whiskers" is just a troop horse in Uncle Sam's cavalry. There is a long list of these faithful mounts for which troopers themselves have decreed restful old age in reward for their long years of hard duty. The appropriation for this equine roll of honor comes out of the troopers' pockets if necessary, but the deeds of hero horses of the army have been officially recorded in general orders before now.

"Comanche" Heads Hero Horses.

"Comanche" probably heads that list. He was the only survivor of the massacre of the Little Big Horn, when Custer and his gallant detachment went to their death. Legend has pictured this big charger, found wandering and almost dead after the battle with seven wounds to show the part he played. The records show he was a troop horse assigned to Troop 1, Seventh cavalry, and was ridden in the fight by Capt. M. W. Keogh, who died at his chief's side. A regimental order of the Seventh, dated Fort A. Lincoln, Dakota territory, April 10, 1879, directed that Comanche be provided with suitable quarters "and that he will not be ridden by any person whatever under any circumstances, nor will he be put to any kind of work," as a tribute to comrades fallen in the fight.

That order was never violated. "Comanche" died at the cavalry post at Fort Riley, Kansas, in 1891. He lived two-thirds of his life on the retired list.

The yellowed records of the cavalry show many other famous horses, coming clear down to Pershing's "Kobron," bought from the French remount service to carry the general in France, and "Jeff," the big, amiable charger presented to Pershing on his return to the United States and on which he headed the victory parades of the First division in New York and Washington.

And among the old records there is none more striking than that of "Black Tom," the mighty coal black on which Colonel May, the Charles O'Malley of the American cavalry in the '40s, set tongues wagging by his mad pranks. May was arrested in Baltimore once for leaping his black thunderbolt over a cart loaded with firewood. Again he spurred Black Tom up the front stairs of a Baltimore hotel and down again after a log about the rooms. The horse won a wager with a leap of 32 feet just after the Mexican war, against a record of 34 feet for the greatest English steeplechaser. Black Tom's greatest achievement came in the war when May jumped him over a Mexican field gun to capture the entire battery and the Mexican general, La Vaga. That deed is memorialized in the coat of arms of the Second cavalry.

Black Tom stood more than seventeen hands, a jet black Kentucky thoroughbred, and his dashing master was more than a six footer.

Taylor's Mount Lost Tall.

Another army horse of Mexican war fame was Gen. Zachary Taylor's Old Whitey, who carried his master throughout the war and was never ridden again. He was sent to Washington to be exhibited after the war and was well nigh stripped of his mane and tail on the journey by souvenir hunters.

Among famous horses of the war between the states, Robert E. Lee's Traveler perhaps is best known, although Gen. Nathaniel P. Bank's Charlie is credited in a legendary way with having shaped events of the war. He was the only horse known to have thrown General Grant. The fall put the general on crutches and kept him from the battlefield at Chickamauga. Perhaps his absence contributed to the Union disaster in that fight.

Traveler, Lee's famous gray, was a West Virginia horse and was offered to the great Confederate commander as a gift by the owner, but refused. The owner, Maj. Thomas L. Brown, then sold him and Traveler served as Lee's main reliance in the war days and his constant companion afterward. The general always stood beside him when he was shod, as the horse was nervous.

Builds Three-Unit Airship Like Mother-Bird

Berlin.—A three-unit dirigible, said to be storm-proof and resembling a giant mother-bird flying with two "babies" tucked, one under each wing, has been designed by Baron Boris von Loutzkov, veteran aircraft and motor builder.

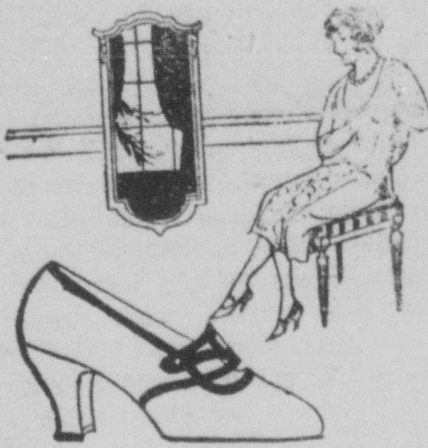

Baron von Loutzkov asserts that his three-unit ship is three times as safe as a single-unit ship. Each is a separate dirigible. The three are hitched together by steel cables. In case of accident to one or two units, he declares passengers and crew can clamber aboard an undamaged unit and cut loose one or both of the other units.

Vacation Given to Rites

In China and India many persons devote their vacation period to performing religious rites and are not reconciled to make their recreation season each year one of pleasure. The same holds true in a measure in Japan and to some extent in Germany. It is only the occidental countries which plainly make vacation a period of pleasure.

FELIX KATHE HELD GUILTY OF STEALING

Accused Confessed Theft of Automobile in September of Last Year.

Columbus, O., March 12, (UP) — A jury in common pleas court here this afternoon found Felix J. Kathe, of Chillicothe, guilty of automobile theft. Sentence was withheld pending hearing of Kathe's appeal for a new trial.

Kathe was alleged to have stolen an automobile in September, 1925. When the car was found in the possession of Gwendolyn Baughn, Washington C. H., Kathe told Assistant County Prosecutor Hicks that he had merely "loaned" it to her for several days.

Kathe's first story stated that he had bought the car from a man named "Allbright" for either $1200 or $1300 in cash. Later Kathe told in his first story, that, "Allbright" had allowed him to use the car three or four days "to try it out."

After grilling by police, Kathe confessed to the stealing of the car, according to Hicks. D. E. Owens, Chillicothe chiropractor, was arrested with Kathe and was also charged with stealing another automobile.

SAYS FORECASTING QUAKE IS FUTILE

Italian Scientist Declares Instruments Useless.

Faenza, Italy.—The ghastly list of casualties resulting from the instability of the earth's crust has reached appalling figures in the first 20 years of the Twentieth century. This is more than sufficient to give a right idea of the vast, important and complex problem of seismic forecasting, and the necessity and usefulness of solving it.

This statement was made by Raffaele Bendandi, Italian carpenter-scientist, who has made many accurate predictions of earthquakes.

America has taken the initiative by starting a vast work of preparation, tending greatly to reduce the appalling consequences that would result from an earthquake in populated areas.

Investigation Is Authorized.

Carnegie institute at Washington is carrying out the most minute researches concerning earthquakes and appropriating large sums toward establishing a chain of geophysical observatories in southern California.

The United States coast and geodetic survey was empowered by congress to start an accurate investigation of the causes and the effects of the telluric movements. The engineering economic foundation is making preparations in case of a disaster in any of the large American cities.

Special classes on seismology have been instituted in many universities of the New World.

All these plans, however, though carried out with the abundance of means of which America alone is capable, cannot be productive of a precise forecasting of earthquakes. Telluric movements, which still constitute a puzzle to science, persist in being as impenetrable a mystery as ever. As the most powerful modern telescope is of no use in forecasting an eclipse or any other celestial phenomenon, likewise the most sensitive recording machinery is of no avail to the seismologist in predicting earthquakes.

The earth has a precise history which dates back for centuries. Grandiose events followed each other in succession in prehistoric ages, and their traces can be found everywhere. The earth has its laws and habits but they cannot be traced with mechanical apparatus, as so many erroneously believe.

The earthquake is not an outbreak of blind forces, but an unavoidable and forecastable movement of the earth regulated by precise laws. The forecasting of earthquakes, as often has been demonstrated, is a possible fact, but it is necessary to start from a new theoretical conception as to the origin of these phenomena. Researches being carried on in the seismological field are following the wrong track.

The forecasting of earthquakes is possible, but it is indispensable to admit in advance that the telluric activity, wherever it occurs, is closely connected by an inter-continental link and that volcanoes and earthquakes have a common origin, even though forces endangering the centers wherefrom such phenomena originate are of different and manifold character.

Quakes Are Predicted.

Think of the wonder that will be aroused the day in which my new seismographic theory, finally announced and duly expounded, will in a most clear and unmistakable way prove that the most tremendous disasters, such as those at Charleston in 1886, Martinique 1902, San Francisco 1906, Messina 1908, Yokohama 1923, and the recent one at Santa Barbara, could have been predicted a considerable time in advance, as I publicly proved in connection with the earthquake at Santa Barbara, for they all came from the same origin and cause.

To this great conception, whereby it is possible to explain and predict earthquakes, is connected the perennial sliding of the poles, a fact that has aroused such tremendous interest in the scientific world.

This cause, unique and profound, which makes the unexplored underground ferment and threaten, is positively the same one from which the orogenetical corrugation of the earth's crust originates, a corrugation that shaped the mountains throughout the centuries by means of earthquakes, bradisism, eruptions and similar outbursts, whereof those which now terrify us are but episodes.

The forecasting of earthquakes is possible only by treading along this path. But as long as the American offensive against earthquakes, though involving the expenditure of huge sums, is confined to founding observatories, installing apparatus, studying effects rather than causes, it will not cause the saving of a dollar or a human life, nor will it help in forecasting the repetition of the frightful phenomenon.

In all English literature there is nothing that so reflects society of the time in which it was written, between 1660 and 1690, as Pepys' Diary. It was inscribed in shorthand by Samuel Pepys and was not published until 1825. The years in which he wrote were gay and profligate times.

Power of Attorney

Our word attorney is said to have been derived from the French "tour," meaning turn. An attorney is a person qualified to act for another at law. A person not a member of the legal profession can be empowered by a written authorization to represent another person and act for him with respect to a certain matter or generally.
